Birkenhead, a seaport and parliamentary borough of England, co. of Chester, on the estuary of the Mersey, immediately opposite Liverpool, and 15 miles NNW. of Chester. It has wholly risen up since the erection of ship-building docks in 1824 on Wallasey pool, immediately on its NW. side. In 1844 a series of magnificent docks were begun on the side of the Mersey, and these have been from time to time very greatly extended. The quays represent a water frontage of about 10 miles. A railway tunnel under the Mersey connects the town with Liverpool, of which it is virtually a part. Birkenhead has large ship-yards, and the other industries include the manufacture of iron and steel bridges, the casting of iron, etc. Pop. in 1901, 110,915.

Birkenshaw, a town of England, in Yorkshire, 4 miles by rail SE. of Bradford. Pop. about 2000.

Birket-Kerun, bir'ket ká-room, LAKE OF KERUN, or more generally (but erroneously) Birket el-Kerun, LAKE OF THE HORN, a lake of Egypt, in the Fayum, is 34 miles long and 64 miles in greatest breadth. It is shallow (13 feet in average depth) and brackish, and without outlet. Its surface is 130 feet below the level of the Mediterranean. It abounds in fish. There seems to be no longer doubt that the lake is a relic or last trace of the ancient Lake Moëris, whose waters occupied the greater part of the basin of the Fayum and stood 70 feet above the level of the sea.

Birket-Lut, the Arabic name of the DEAD SEA.

Birkett, a hamlet of Washtenaw co., Mich.

Birmensdorf, béer'mens-dorf, a village of Switzerland, canton of Aargau.

Birmingham, bir'ming-am, one of the principal manufacturing towns of England, and a civic county, 73 miles SE. of Liverpool and 103 miles NW. of London. The town, on the Res, occupies the E. declivity of three hills. In its centre is a handsome quarter containing the grammar-school of Edward VI., St. Philip's and Christ's churches, Queen's College, Birmingham and Midland Institute, central free library (with 160,000 volumes), theatre, and other edifices. The superb town-hall, in the Corinthian style, occupies a commanding site; it is built of Anglesea marble, and has a hall 145 feet in length, 65 feet in breadth, and the same in height. Its fine organ contains 4000 pipes. The free grammar-school, founded in 1552 and rebuilt in 1834, is a richly decorated Gothic edifice. Queen's College, incorporated by royal charter in 1843 and munificently endowed, is in connection with the University of London, and attached to it are a medical school and Queen's Hospital. St. Martin's Church, in the Bull-ring, dates from the thirteenth century. Other buildings and institutions are the Council House (completed in 1878), art gallery and museum, the new grand theatre, cathedral of St. Chad, Masonic hall, municipal technical school (built in 1894), etc. The Birmingham University, formerly Mason College, has faculties of art, science, medicine, engineering, and commerce, with laboratories, a school of brewing, etc. It was built in 1875-86, and is attended by 500-600 students. Birmingham has nine public parks, of which the largest are Canon Hill, West Smethwick, Victoria, and Aston, the last-named containing Aston Hall. The industries of Birmingham are various and most important, and give employment to about 100,000 work-people. The city is one of the chief centres of the world for the manufacture of brass, iron, and general metallic-ware (hardware, cutlery). The manufacture of guns and rifles gives employment to about 10,000. The celebrated steel-works of Gillett & Son are located here. Other manufactures are those of railroad-cars, iron roofs, girders, saddlery, gold, silver, plated, bronze, ormolu, and japanned wares, papier-maché goods, toys, jewelry, electro-plated goods, buttons, glass, tools, steam-engines, and all kinds of machinery. Among the manufacturing establishments (in the suburb of Smethwick, which also contains a light-house plant) is the steam-engine factory with which the name of the inventor Watt is associated and which still bears the name of Soho, though removed from its original site. Wages are higher in Birmingham than in most of the towns of the north of England, and the condition of its artisans is in favorable contrast to that exhibited at many other places, both as to health and prosperity. Birmingham is the seat of a Roman Catholic bishop. The immense coal- and iron-beds of the district by which Birmingham is surrounded are the main source of its manufacturing prosperity, which has also been greatly aided by canals communicating with the Thames, Severn, Mersey, Trent, and Humber, and more recently by railways. Its great industrial importance dates only from the seventeenth century. Birmingham, a municipal borough since 1838 and city since 1888, returns 7 members to parliament. Pop. in 1871, 343,787; in 1891, 429,171; in 1901, 522,204.

Birmingham, a city, capital of Jefferson co., Ala., on the Central R. of Georgia, the Kansas City, Memphis and Birmingham and other railroads, 95 miles NNW. of Montgomery. It contains a number of prominent public buildings, the St. Vincent Hospital (completed in 1900), and several parks. Its industries are largely associated with coal- and iron-mining, which is being extensively prosecuted in the surrounding districts. Iron Mountain, 6 miles distant, contains almost inexhaustible deposits of hematite. Three-fourths of the Alabama iron-ore is obtained from the Birmingham district. The city has numerous blast-furnaces, rolling-mills, steel-works, railroad machine-shops, etc. It is the trade-centre for a large agricultural region and has extensive cotton and cotton-seed oil interests. Pop. in 1880, 3066; in 1890, 26,178; in 1900, 33,415.

Black or Euxine (uk'sin) Sea (anc. Pon'tus Euri-nus; Turk. Kara Dengiz, kâ'râ deng'iz), a great inland sea between Europe and Asia, between lat. 40° 45' and 46° 45' N. and lon. 27° 30' and 41° 50' E. Extreme length, about 715 miles; greatest breadth, 380 miles. Area, approximately 170,000 sq. m. Its drainage area has been estimated to be about 950,000 sq. m. It is surrounded by Russia, Rumania, Bulgaria, and Asiatic and European Turkey, and communicates by the Strait of Yenikale with the Sea of Azov on the N., and by the Bosphorus with the Sea of Marmora in the SW. Its further communication is with the Mediterranean, westward through the Sea of Marmora and the Dardanelles. The shores of the Euxine are bold and high on the NE., E., and SW., but flat on the N. and NW.; its depth is prodigious, being at its maximum 7350 feet, and with a close approximation to this over a large part of its central area. The deeper waters are seemingly immobile, and perhaps even stagnant, rendering them unfit for animal life. Only the upper zone of about 100 fathoms appears to have a vertical circulation. There is a constant surface-flow out through the Bosphorus, which is compensated for by a deeper inwardly setting stream. The water has on the average only one-half the salinity of the ocean, the density ranging from 1.012 to 1.017—a condition due to the vast quantity of fresh water that is thrown into the basin by the large inflowing streams. The sea has numerous ports; but the only gulf of importance is that of Kerkinit, between the Crimea and the mainland of Russia. There are several islands near the mouth of the Danube, but few elsewhere. The chief affluents are the Danube, Dniester, Bug, Dnieper, the Don (by the Sea of Azov and the Strait of Yenikale), and the Kuban in Europe; and the Kisil-Irmak and Sakarieh in Asia. The Black Sea has no perceptible tide; it is liable to frequent storms, such as are generally met with in great lakes and enclosed seas; but its navigation is so far from being dangerous, as was formerly represented, that probably no sea of equal extent is more safe. It is generally almost entirely free of ice. The waters formerly stood at a considerably higher level than they do to-day, but recent explorations have failed to establish any relation existing between this high level and the elevated beach-lines of the Aralo-Caspian basin. The basin of the Black Sea, like that of the Mediterranean, appears to have been brought about through comparatively recent subsidence or crustal breakage.

Bogotá, bo-go-tā', formerly Santa Fé de Bogotá, san'tā fā dā bo-go-tā', a city, the capital of the republic of Colombia and of the department of Cundinamarca, and the see of an archbishop, is situated on the San Francisco River, on an elevated plain, 8630 feet above the sea. It lies at the foot of the Suma-Pas Mountains, with a delightful climate, resembling a perpetual autumn; the mean yearly temperature is 58°, with a rainfall of 43.5 inches. Lat. 4° 35' N.; lon. 74° 13' W. The streets are narrow, but regular, crossing one another at right angles. The principal street, Calle de la República, is very handsome, terminating at one end in a square (Plaza de la Constitución), formed by the palace of the president, the cathedral, the custom-house, etc. Bogotá being subject to earthquakes (in main part destroyed by the earthquake of Nov. 16, 1827), the houses are low and strongly built of sun-dried brick. The religious structures of the city are disproportionately numerous. Bogotá, a centre of Spanish culture for a long period, contains a university, the Colegio Nacional de San Bartolomé, various other colleges, a military academy, a national library (with about 50,000 volumes), observatory, botanic garden, natural history museum, etc. It has manufactures of soap, cloth, cordage, porcelain, glass, etc. The environs of Bogotá are highly interesting. The Rio Francisco, which traverses the city, joins the Rio Bogotá (or Funza) in the centre of the plain, and the conjoint waters descend in a SW. direction through a long and narrow ravine, and are precipitated at Tequendama, where they are contracted to 36 feet in width, in a magnificent fall, nearly 500 feet high. About 20 miles from the falls is the natural bridge of Icononzo or Pandi, formed by two rocks that unite the opposite sides of a deep mountain-cleft, 300 feet above a small torrent. The plain or Campo contains coal-fields, and, towards the N. border, the rich salt-mines of Zipaquirá. Bogotá is the commercial emporium for the inland territory, and is connected by rail and highway with Honda, La Dorada, and Jirardot on the Magdalena River. The city was founded by Quesada in 1538, and made an archbishopric in 1561. It was formerly capital of the Spanish viceroyalty of New Granada. Pop. about 120,000.

Bohemia, bo-hee-me-s (Ger. Böhmen, bō'men; Bohem. Cechy), a province and nominal kingdom of Austria-Hungary, Cisleithanian division, between lat. 48° 33' and 51° 3' N. and lon. 12° 7' and 16° 46' E.; bounded NW. by the kingdom of Saxony, NE. by the Prussian province of Silesia, SE. by Moravia and Lower Austria, S. by Upper Austria, and SW. by Bavaria. Length, from E. to W., 210 miles; breadth, from N. to S., 170 miles. Area, 20,060 sq. m. Pop. in 1900 (Dec. 31), 6,318,280. The territory consists of a series of upland valleys and basins, which are surrounded on all sides by mountains, and belong almost exclusively to the basin of the Elbe, by which stream the country is drained through a single defile on the Saxon frontier. Several chains of lofty mountains constitute the natural boundaries of the Bohemian basin. On the NE. it is separated from Silesia by the Riesengebirge (Giant Mountains), the principal branch of the Sudetic system, of which the highest peak is the Schneekoppe (snow-top), 5264 feet, and by the Adlergebirge (Eagle Mountains; the Hehe Menze, 3550 feet). N. and NW. it is separated from Saxony by the Erzgebirge (Ore Mountains), which are parted NE. from the Riesengebirge by the defile through which the Elbe leaves Bohemia. W. and SW. it is separated from Bavaria and Upper Austria by the Böhmerwald (Bohemian Forest), which at its NW. extremity is separated from the Erzgebirge by the depression through which the Eger flows. On the SE. the Bohemian-Moravian plateau, uniting at its SW. extremity with the Böhmerwald and at its NE. with the Adlergebirge, completes the circle of mountains by which Bohemia is enclosed. Several offsets from these chains, of inferior height, intersect the kingdom. The principal affluent of the Elbe in Bohemia is the Moldau.

Bohemia has no large lakes, but there are innumerable ponds. The region is famous for its mineral springs, the best-known of which are the saline chalybeate springs of Franzensbad, Marienbad, and Gieschütbel; the warm alkaline aperient springs of Karlsbad and Teplitz; the bitter cathartic waters of Sedlitz, Saidschitz, and Püllna; and the sulphurous springs of Teplitz. Bohemia is rich in minerals, which include silver, iron, lead, copper, tin, antimony, uranium, and other metals, as well as sulphur, alum, and graphite. It is above all a great coal-region, its coal-fields being the most productive in Austria-Hungary. Precious and ornamental stones and porcelain earth are obtained in many parts. The Bohemian region is largely constructed of asioic and ancient Paleozoic rocks, but there are also marine deposits of Triassic and Cretaceous age and vast intrusions and outflows of volcanic material.

The climate is in general healthy. The mean annual temperature, exclusive of the mountainous districts, ranges between 45° and 50°. In the Böhmerwald the snow is often found 12 feet deep, and lies till the middle of April. Except in the lofty mountain-ranges, the soil of Bohemia is generally fertile, more especially in the N. and NE. The principal crops raised are rye, barley, wheat, oats, potatoes, beets, flax, hops, rape-seed, and poppy-seed. Fruit is abundant, especially apples and plums. The forests cover nearly 30 per cent. of the surface of the country and abound in game. Large quantities of a superior breed of carp are exported from Bohemia to North Germany. Bohemia is the great manufacturing region of Austria-Hungary. The manufactures include textiles, beet-sugar, beer, spirits, glassware and porcelain, metal-wares, machinery, chemicals, paper, wooden-ware, buttons, leather, clothing, lace, embroideries, and chocolate. Glass has been a staple article of Bohemian manufacture since the thirteenth century, and the art of glass-grinding can scarcely be equalled in any other country.

Three-fifths of the people are Czechs (Bohemians), a Slavic race, with a language of their own, an old and well-developed literature, and strong national feelings. Nearly all the remainder are Germans, who, as a whole, represent the more cultured and intelligent element, the bulk of the Czechs being peasants and dwellers in the small towns and villages. A bitter struggle for ascendancy is being waged by the two nationalities. The Czechs regard the country as their national domain, it having been originally a Slavic kingdom, and demand the restoration of the so-called realm of St. Wenceslas (including the adjoining Moravia). They insist on the right of Bohemia to enjoy an autonomous position within the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy analogous to that held by Hungary. The population of Bohemia is nearly all Roman Catholic. There are about 100,000 Jews.

Bohemia possesses one of the largest institutions of learning in Europe, the University of Prague, founded in 1348. It existed until 1882 as a German university, but in that year the Czech University of Prague was installed by the side of the original one.

Bohemia derives its name from its early inhabitants, the Boii, a Celtic people, who were expelled soon after the beginning of the Christian era by the Marcomanni. About the middle of the sixth century a numerous army of Czechs entered the country and subdued it. Bohemia, under its dukes, and later its kings, was included in the Holy Roman Empire of the Germans. The immigration of Germans in the Middle Ages greatly improved the character of the country, which in the fourteenth century, under the Luxemburg dynasty, was one of the most flourishing kingdoms in Europe. In the fifteenth century the Hussite Wars devastated the country. Since 1526, Bohemia has been ruled by the House of Austria. The encroachments of the Austrian monarchs on the religious liberties of the Protestants led in 1618 to an outbreak, which was the beginning of the Thirty Years' War. The overthrow of the Bohemian Protestants in the battle of the White Mountain (Prague), in 1620, was followed by the forfeiture of their liberties and the complete subjection of the country to the Catholic Church. The revival of the national spirit among the Czechs in the nineteenth century has culminated in a revolutionary agitation, which is a menace to the permanency of the Austro-Hungarian realm.

Bokhara, bo-kâ'râ (anc. Transoxiana), a country and khanate of central Asia and vassal state of Russia. It is part of what is sometimes broadly understood as Turkestan. In its political limits it is bounded on the N. by Russian Turkestan (provinces of Syr-Darya, Samarkand, and Fergana), on the E. by the Pamir highland, on the S. by Afghanistan, and W. by the Russian Transcaspian province. Area, about 80,000 sq. m. Population estimated at 1,500,000, exclusive of wandering hordes. The surface in the western part is largely arid plains and desert-sands, cultivable only along the watercourses and in favored oases; in the centre and E. it is boldly mountainous, with the Hissar Mountains along the northern frontier, the Baba-tagh in the centre, and the Karategin and Peter the Great ranges in the NE. and E. These are largely offshoots of the Tian-Shan. The Amu-Darya forms a large part of the southern boundary, after which the Zerashan is the principal river. The climate shows extremes of heat and cold, with the temperature ranging from 107° (shade) to -10°. Cotton, tobacco, indigo, wool, silk, grain, and various fruits and vegetables are extensively cultivated; the grapes and apricots are especially noted. Fine horses, shawl-goats, asses, and camels are bred. The mineral wealth of the country is important. It is inhabited by pee-ple of many tribes (Uzbeks constituting the main military force of the Ameer),—Kirghizes, Turkomans, Tajiks, Arabs, Persians, Jews, Afghans, etc. The caravan trade is very extensive, and commercial facilities have latterly been furthered by the passage through the region of the Transcaspian railway, which crosses the Amu-Darya at Teherjui. The chief towns are Bokhara (the capital) and Karshi; of less note are Teherjui and Hissar. Bokhara was the seat of powerful realms in the Middle Ages.

Bokhara, capital of the khanate of Bokhara, near the Zerashan River, 130 miles W. of Samarkand. Lat. 39° 48' N.; lon. 64° 26' E. It is in a desert-surrounded but exceedingly fertile oasis, among hills, is 8 miles in circumference, enclosed by earthen ramparts, and intersected by canals. The streets are very narrow and the houses mostly small and flat-roofed. In the centre is the citadel, containing the palace and the residences of the state officers. Bokhara has upward of 160 mosques, several of great architectural beauty, and a large number of colleges, this city, which is held in great veneration by Moslems, having been long famous as a seat of Mohammedan learning. The city is an important commercial centre of central Asia, and it has extensive manufactures of cotton, silk, and woollen goods, wooden-ware, iron, leather, etc. It has a vast bazaar, which is largely stocked with Russian and English goods. Bokhara is connected by rail (about 8 miles) with Russian or New Bokhara, which is on the main line of the Transcaspian railway. Pop. about 70,000–90,000.

Bolivia (Sp. pron. bo-lee've-á), officially, República Boliviana, a South American republic, is bounded on the N. and E. by Brasil, on the S. by Paraguay and the Argentine Republic, and on the W. by Chile and Peru. The Mamoré, Guaporé, and Paraguay Rivers form the greater part of the eastern boundary with Brasil. The country is mostly included between  $14^{\circ} 6'$  (the Yaquirana) and  $23^{\circ}$  S. It is divided into the eight departments of Beni (with Acre), Chuquisaca, Cochabamba, La Paz or La Pas de Ayaconcho, Oruro, Potosí, Santa Cruz, and Tarija, and the National Territory (of colonisation). The total area is approximately 520,000 sq. m., but much of the boundary with Peru and Chile is still in dispute. The population is variously estimated at from 1,250,000 to upward of 2,000,000, of whom it is generally supposed 250,000–300,000 are wild Indians.

Surface of the Country.—The greater part of the west- and south-central portions of Bolivia is mountainous, and is comprised within the great Andean system, containing many of the loftiest summits of the Western Hemisphere. The main line of heights is compassed in the different ramifications of the Eastern Cordillera, or Cordillera Real, between which and the Western Cordillera is included part of the great plateau and interior basin, the Altiplanicie Central, about 500 miles in length and with an altitude of 12,000–13,000 feet, the N. half of which is occupied by Lake Titicaca and the S. parts by Lake Aullagas and other saline bodies of water. These seemingly at one time constituted a united vast internal sea, the outlet of which was through the Beni to the Amazon. The Peruvian boundary is generally assumed to pass through the centre of Lake Titicaca. (See TITICACA.) The loftiest mountain-summits are the non-volcanic Illampu or Sorata (with the Ancohuma and Illampu summits, 21,490 and 21,275 ft., respectively) and Illimani, 21,190 ft., both in the department of La Paz. Huina Potosí, located between these two giants, has an elevation of 20,260 ft. Volcanic mountains are numerous, and rise to nearly the loftiest positions of the land (Sajama, upward of 21,000 ft.; Licancaur, on the SW. boundary with Chile, about 19,500 ft.). Northward and eastward of the mountains Bolivia falls off in vast undulating plains (Llanos, Pampas) to the valleys of the Amazon basin and the Gran Chaco of Paraguay.

Since the readjustment of the boundary with Chile, following upon the war of 1879–81, when the country lost its littoral, Bolivia has no coast-line. Much the greater part of the country is drained by tributaries of the Madeira, one of the chief affluents of the Amazon. Such streams are the Madre de Dios, Beni, Mamoré, and Guaporé or Itenes. In the S. and SE. the country is drained by the Pilcomayo and Paraguay, and their branches, into the basin of the La Plata.

Climate and Productions.—Bolivia lies in the torrid zone, but has a great variety of climate, depending on the elevation of the land. The mountains are covered with perpetual snow, and in the highest table-lands there is frost every night of the year, but the air is dry and pure. The higher cold and treeless tracts, those above 11,000 ft., are designated Punas. At Potosí, which has an elevation of about 13,300 ft., the nights are always piercingly cold, but the rays of the sun are hot and powerful between 2 and 5 P.M. La Paz, at an elevation of 12,000 ft., has a mean annual temperature of about  $50^{\circ}$ . Between the altitudes of 9500 and 11,000 ft. the climate is temperate, and wheat and maize are cultivated, while in the tracts of the Medio Yungas, which descend to about 5500 ft., the climate is such as to permit of the successful cultivation of both tropical and temperate fruits. This is the zone of the great cinchona forests, whose luxuriant development is one of the marked features of the flora of the eastern Andes. Perpetual summer reigns in the lowest region, called Yungas, comprising all below 5000 ft., which produces all tropical fruits and vegetation. The northern plains have a hot and humid climate, and are covered with dense forests. Among the indigenous plants are the palm, cinchona, cacao, bamboo, the maté or Paraguay tea, and the coca. Bolivia also produces balsam, bananas, castor-oil or rubber, vanilla, copal, coffee, cotton, sugar, potatoes, corn, tobacco, the chirimoya, farina, and sarsaparilla. The Bolivians chew large quantities of the coca-leaf, which is a powerful stimulant.

The animal life of Bolivia is very varied, and comprises forms that are more distinctively tropical in habit (jaguar, armadillo, tapir, numerous monkeys, peccary), and others that belong to the higher mountain-tracts (llama, alpaca, guanaco, vicuña, vizcachas). The puma extends its range into this region both in its warmer and colder parts. Among the birds are the condor, various species of parrot, and numerous humming-birds, a number of which appear to be sharply localized in their habitats. The alpaca and llama are domesticated, and exist in large numbers on the higher plateaus. Multitudes of cattle roam in a semi-wild condition over the grassy plains or campos.

Minerals.—This republic is noted for the variety and richness of its mineral resources, having numerous mines of gold, silver, copper, tin, lead, mercury, and iron. Coal is found in the departments of Beni and Chuquisaca. The silver-mines of Potosí and Oruro have long been celebrated, and are among the richest in the world. Silver was first discovered at Potosí in 1545, and the yield up to this time from these famous mines exceeds $3,000,000,000. The production of tin follows immediately after that of silver, the chief mining centre being the district of Huanuni. Gold is found in the Andes and in several departments, the most important locations being in the departments of La Paz and Santa Cruz. The gold-washings of Tipuani have yielded large results. Copper-mining has been extensively developed, especially in the districts of Corocoro and Charilla. Diamonds, opals, emeralds, and topazes are also found. The development of the mineral resources of Bolivia has been hindered by the distance of the mines from navigable water and the expense of transporting the ore or metal to the coast, but since the advent of railways and the discovery of coal a revival in mining enterprise has been noticeable. The silver product in 1899 was placed at 11,155,190 Troy ounces.

Commerce, etc.—The republic of Bolivia is not favorably situated for commerce, possessing no seaboard, while its great rivers are for the most part rendered unnavigable by numerous rapids. There are few good roads in the country. Bolivia has in operation several short railways, and one of the main outlets is the Peruvian railroad from Lake Titicaca to the seaport of Mollendo. The total railroad mileage of the republic was, in 1902, 625. The chief articles of export, besides the metals, are alpaca wool, chinchilla fur, leather, hides, rubber, cacao, cinchona-bark, coffee, coca, vanilla, and copal.

Races, Government, etc.—The population is composed of Indians, mixed races, called mestizos, sambos, and mulattoes,—who have some Spanish blood mixed with Indian or negro,—and of whites, mainly of Spanish origin. Some of the Indians are civilized, especially the Aymará and Quichua tribes, who are remnants of the great Inca nation and inhabit the highlands of western Bolivia. The eastern plains are inhabited by tribes of wild Indians, who have no affinity with the Aymará and Quichuas. The predominant religion of Bolivia is Roman Catholic, and the prevailing language is Spanish.

The republic was founded in 1825, and named in honor of Simon Bolívar, the Liberator. The territory included in the new state was previously called Upper Peru. The executive government consists of a president (elected for a term of four years), two vice-presidents, a ministry of five members, and three secretaries of state. The legislative functions are exercised by two chambers—the senate and the chamber of deputies. Bolivia has been disturbed by frequent revolutions and civil wars. Capital, La Paz; formerly, Sucre (Chuquisaca).

Bologna, bo-lón'yá (anc. Felina, Bononia), a city of Italy, capital of a province of the same name, in the old Romagna, finely situated in a plain N. of the Apennines, at the crossing of two important railways, 24 miles SE. of Modena and 27 miles SW. of Ferrara. Lat. 44° 30' N.; lon. 11° 21' E. Elevation, 165 feet above the sea. It forms an oval enclosed by a brick wall, about 2 miles in length by 1½ miles in breadth, entered by 12 gates, and intersected by the Reno Canal. Its interesting streets and fine colonnades, its churches and splendid palaces, its many works of art, and its educational institutions render Bologna one of the most notable of Italian cities. Its university, one of the most ancient in Europe, had at one time 10,000 students. It has now an attendance of about 1500; its exceedingly valuable library contains about 250,000 volumes. Bologna has an academy of fine arts, with rich galleries of painting and sculpture, a grand school of music, a communal library with 170,000 volumes, cabinets of natural history, an observatory, a botanic garden (one of the richest in Europe), and a museum of antiquities (in the Museo Civico). Among the principal churches are San Stefano, one of the oldest in Italy; the cathedral, a fine edifice of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, with paintings by the Carracci; San Petronio (length, 384 feet), with magnificent sculptural works and the meridian of Cassini traced on the floor; San Domenico, and San Bartolommeo. Many of the churches date from the early centuries of Christianity. The other principal edifices are the palazzo pubblico, the podestà palace (the present town-hall), numerous fine private palaces, and the famous leaning towers of Asinelli, 320 feet high, dating from 1109, and Garisenda, 163 feet high and 10 feet out of the perpendicular (or 6 feet more than the Asinelli). The industries of Bologna comprise the manufacture of machinery, surgical instruments, silks, candles, perfumes, etc., the making of sausages (for which the place is famous), macaroni, and preserves, book-printing, lithographing, etc. The city is an archbishop's see. Bologna takes a prominent place in the ancient and mediæval history of Italy. It was originally an Etruscan town. Under the Romans it rose to great prosperity. In modern times, prior to 1860, it was part of the papal possessions. Pop. in 1901 (with suburbs), 132,237; of the commune, 152,009.

Bombay, bōm'bā' (Hindu, Bambai), a seaport of British India, capital of the presidency of Bombay, on the island of Bombay (now artificially converted into a peninsula, all of which is included in the municipal limits). Lat. of the observatory, 18° 53' 45" N.; lon. 72° 48' 55" E. Since the opening of its extensive railway communications, the development of cotton-culture in India, and the construction of the Suez Canal, Bombay has wonderfully increased in wealth and importance. It is well built, with spacious and handsome streets, fine public and mercantile buildings, tramway lines, and all the sanitary improvements of a great modern city. Many of the Europeans have their residences on Malabar Hill and at Breach Candy, on the side of the island facing the sea. The projecting ridge of Malabar Hill and a long, narrow peninsular projection, terminating in Kolaba Island, form what is known as the Back Bay, on the S. side of Bombay Island. At the head of the latter peninsula is the quarter of the city called the Castle, containing the principal government buildings, the town-hall (having a library of 100,000 volumes), the university library, and spacious public squares, adorned with statues. On the W. side of the Castle extends the broad Esplanade, with a statue of Queen Victoria. N. of the Castle stretches the native quarter called the Black Town; and further north are the Victoria Gardens, with a museum and botanical and zoological gardens. The suburban houses are interspersed with groves of cocoanut-trees, and often overshadowed by mangoes, palms, and tamarinds. Among the public institutions are the Victoria and Albert Museum and the observatory. The University of Bombay is not a teaching body, but merely grants degrees. There are large cotton-mills, tanneries, dye-works, and shops for metal-work, as well as native distilleries and manufactures of artistic wares. Bombay now surpasses Calcutta in the volume of its commerce. The chief exports are cotton, grain, and opium. Many of the leading merchants are Parsees. In point of health and comfort few places in India excel Bombay. The harbor of Bombay is unequalled for safety in all India. It affords good anchorage for ships of the largest burden; on it are excellent building- and other docks for ships of the first class. The Victoria railway station, completed in 1897, is one of the most magnificent structures of its kind in the world. Some of the old forts defending the harbor of Bombay still remain. Pop. in 1881, 773,196; in 1891, 804,470; in 1901, 776,006. More than three-fifths of the inhabitants are Hindus and nearly one-fifth Mohammedans. There are about 50,000 Parsees and about an equal number of Christians, of whom only a third are British-born. The Jains number about 25,000 and the Jews about 5000.

BOMBAY ISLAND, on which the city is situated, is one of a cluster of islands, and the largest of all, except Salsette, with which it is connected by a mound, an arched stone bridge, and railway embankments. It is 11 miles long from N. to S. and 3 miles broad, formed by two ranges of rock of unequal length, running parallel to each other on opposite sides of the island. The interior was formerly liable to be overflowed by the sea, which is now prevented by substantial works and embankments. The lower parts are still covered with water during the rainy monsoon. This island is, next to Madras, the oldest of the British possessions in the East. It passed into the possession of Portugal early in the sixteenth century, and was given to Charles II. of Great Britain, in 1661, as part of the dowry of his queen, Catharine of Braganza.

Bombay, a presidency of British India, bounded W. by the Arabian Sea, and enclosed elsewhere by Beluchistan, the Punjab, Rajputana, Indore, the Central Provinces, Berar, the Nizam's dominions, Madras, and Mysore. Area, including Sindh, 188,825 sq. m., of which 65,761 belong to native states. The country is marked by several mountain-ranges, the most important being the Western Ghats, extending along the coast. The well-marked districts called the Dekkan, Konkan, Gujerat, and Sindh are among the natural divisions of the country. The principal rivers are the Indus, the Nerbudda, and the Tapi. The Ruin of Cutch, a singular arm of the sea, periodically converted into a marshy desert-tract, is a most remarkable natural feature. Rice, several sorts of millet, wheat, oil-seeds, cotton and other fibres, teak, opium, sugar, and tea are among the staple products. Manufacturing is quite largely carried on by the natives, and has of late been undertaken on an important scale, European machinery and capital being employed. Cotton-spinning is the chief industry, about two-thirds of the Indian spindles belonging to the presidency of Bombay. Capital, Bombay, with the seat of government held at Poona during the months of July-November. The chief hill-station is Mahabeshwur. The presidency of Bombay includes Aden, on the coast of Arabia. Pop., inclusive of native states, in 1901, 25,468,209.

Bordeaux, bor'dô' (L. Burdig'ala), a city in the SW. of France, capital of the department of Gironde (in Guienne), on the Garonne, 60 miles from its mouth, on its left bank, and 358 miles SSW. of Paris. Lat. of the observatory,  $44^{\circ} 50' 7'' N.$ ; lon.  $0^{\circ} 38' 21'' W.$  On the right bank of the river, here half a mile wide, is the suburb of La Bastide, with which it is connected by a modern stone bridge of 17 arches and a railway bridge. Bordeaux is one of the most flourishing cities of France in point of industry, commerce, and the cultivation of the arts and sciences. In the old part of the city the streets are crooked and narrow, but the new quarters are very elegant. Of the fine public squares the principal is the Place de la Quinconce, adorned with colossal statues of Montesquieu and Montaigne. Among the most prominent buildings are the mediæval Cathedral of St. André, with a detached bell-tower or campanile, the Church of St. Michel, which has likewise a campanile, the great theatre built by Louis XVI., one of the finest in Europe, the bourse, the Hôtel de Ville, the Palais de Justice, and the Hôtel de la Marine. The Palais Gallien (the Emperor Gallienus) represents part of a Roman amphitheatre. Some of the old gates of the city are still preserved. Bordeaux has a university attended by over 2000 students and having a library of 200,000 volumes, institutions of a high order where the fine arts, navigation, agriculture, and the industrial arts are taught, and a fine gallery of paintings.

Bordeaux takes rank next after Marseilles and Havre among the ports of France, both in foreign and in coastwise trade. Its great crescent-shaped harbor or basin, formed by the Garonne, is capable of containing 1000 ships of any size, and is accessible for vessels of 600 tons at all times of the tide, while large ocean steamers can ascend to the city at high tide. An additional port has recently been constructed at Balcan, at the lower end of the city. There are extensive ship-building yards, and the quays are among the finest in Europe. Bordeaux is especially noted as a shipping-place for wine, which is sent to all parts of the world. It has manufactures of liqueurs, vinegar, tobacco, chemical products, and articles connected with the wine trade, as well as sugar-refineries, distilleries, and iron-foundries. The city is the seat of an archbishop. Burdigala was a very important town under the Romans, and was the capital of Aquitania Secunda. Pop. in 1875, 215,140; in 1891, 242,259; in 1901, 245,999.

N. of Bormio, at Molina, on the Adda, are the salt baths called Bagni di Bormio (bän'yee dee bor'me-o), 4380 and 4750 feet above the sea. Bormio lies on the route of the famous Stelvio Pass.

Borna, bor'nä, a manufacturing town of Saxony, 16 miles SSE. of Leipzig. Pop. in 1900, 8422.

Borne, bon'neh, a village of the Netherlands, province of Overijssel, 4 miles NE. of Delden.

Borneo, bor'neo (native, Pu'lo Kalamantin), the fifth largest island in the world, is in the Malay Archipelago, lat. 7° 3' N.-4° 10' S., lon. 108° 50'-119° 20' E. It lies about half in the northern and half in the southern hemisphere, and is of roughly hexagonal outline, with an area of approximately 290,000 sq. m. The coast-line is broken by comparatively few bays and inlets. Much of the interior is little known. The centre seems to be a plateau or nuclear mountain-mass, from which diverge several mountain-chains, of which the principal one runs from SW. to NE. along the longest axis of the island. Between the mountain-ranges are alluvial plains, which towards the ocean are often swampy; and these plains and swamps are at many points rapidly encroaching upon the shallow seas. Their low position subjects them to overflows, the oceanic waters frequently extending far into the interior. A subsidence of 500 feet would carry the ocean nearly to the centre of the island. The highest known mountain-summit is Kinabalu, in British North Borneo, with an elevation of 13,699 feet, at one time erroneously supposed to be a volcano. Mount Tebeng, situated towards the centre of the island, has been thought to be snow-capped. Borneo possesses a number of large rivers, the entrances to most of them unfortunately blocked by bars and morass growth; beyond the bars they are navigable for long distances, and frequently expand into lake-like surfaces with deep water.

The more important streams are the Rejang, Kapuas, Barito (nearly 600 miles in length), Kutai, and Bulangan. Borneo is for the most part a seething jungle, densely clad with rich and varied vegetation. The heat is not generally oppressive, but as a whole the island has a bad reputation in respect to health, especially in the low-lying plains and morass-country of the seaboard. The maximum temperature along the coast ranges from about 82° to 93° or 95° (in August). The rainfall is often very violent, as much as 9 inches having been registered in a single day. At Sandakan the mean annual rainfall is about 124 inches. The mineral wealth of Borneo is great. Considerable gold is obtained here; also some coal and great quantities of antimony. Diamonds are occasionally found, and mercury, salt, petroleum, tin, copper, and iron are known to exist. The island in its present form is geologically of comparatively recent date, the Tertiary strata, which include all the deposits of coal, being widely distributed. There are no active volcanoes, but a few, mostly insignificant, extinct ones have lately been discovered. Among the wild animals are the panther, bear, orang-outang and other apes, rhinoceros, elephant, deer of several kinds, tapir, wild swine, wild oxen, civets, and many others. Insects and reptiles are exceedingly abundant.

Of the native races of men, the Dyaks are the most remarkable and least civilized; but the Malays have long been the dominant race on the coasts. The seaports are largely peopled by Chinese and their half-breed descendants. The vegetable products of the island include excellent timber of many kinds, some cotton, palm-fibre, sago, camphor, gutta-percha, betel, nutmegs, cloves, cinnamon, gambir, rattans, and rice; and nearly all the tropical fruits here attain the highest perfection. The greater portion of the island, constituting what may be termed the southern, central, and eastern sections, is a Dutch possession, being governed directly by Dutch officers or by delegated native chiefs and sultans. This part of the territory is in itself divided into two provinces, West Borneo and South and East Borneo. The remainder of the island is constituted by the sultanates or states of Sarawak, Brunei, and British North Borneo (with the island of Labuan and the interior district, since 1899, of Tambunan), all under the protection of Great Britain, and the last-named (the so-called independent state of North Borneo) being administered directly by the British North Borneo Company. The sultan of Sulu also exercises some jurisdiction over the northern coast. The total population of the island is estimated at 1,750,000, of which nearly 1,200,000 fall to Dutch Borneo (with an area of 213,690 sq. m.). (See BRUNN, BRITISH NORTH BORNEO, and SARAWAK.) The prevailing religion of Borneo is Mohammedanism, except among the Dyaks, who are idolaters. The old Dyak custom of collecting human heads is dying out; and the people, though rude and ignorant, are truthful, moral, and naturally intelligent.

Borneo, Brunei, or Brunei, a sultanate and town of Borneo. See BRUNN.

Borneo Protectorates. See BRITISH NORTH BORNEO, BRUNN, SARAWAK, and LABUAN.

Borname, born'hēm, a town of Belgium, province of Antwerp, on the Scheldt, 15 miles NW. of Mechlin. Pop. (commune) about 6000.

Bornholm, born'hōlm (L. Boringia), an island of Denmark, in the Baltic Sea, forming part of the stift of Zealand, 25 miles S. of the southernmost point of Sweden. Its most northern point is Cape Hammeren, on which is a light-house, in lat. 55° 17' 4" N., lon. 14° 46' 30" E. It is about 23 miles long by 18 broad; area, about 210 sq. m. In general, the coast is high, presenting perpendicular cliffs, close to which is deep water. Where cliffs do not prevail, reefs and sand-banks stretch out to sea, rendering approach dangerous. The highest elevation is 530 feet. The best harbor is at Rønne, the capital, on the SW. side. Excepting an elevated heath-tract near the centre, the land is generally fertile. The island has long been famous for its rock-crystals. Agriculture, cattle-rearing, fishing, and sea-faring afford the chief support of the inhabitants, who own about 200 vessels. Pop. in 1901, 49,877.

Borno, bor'no, a village of Italy, 32 miles NE. of Bergamo, on the Oglio.

Bornos, bor'noos, a town and summer-resort of Spain, in Andalusia, 28 miles NE. of Cadiz, on the Guadalete. Pop. in 1900, 5001.

Bornu, bor'noo' (native, Kanowra), a native kingdom or sultanate of central Africa, in Sudan, between about lat. 10° and 14° N. and lon. 10° and 15° E., having N. Kanem and the Sahara, E. Lake Chad and Baghirmi, S. Mandara, and W. Sokoto. Lake Chad appears to receive all the waters of Bornu. The chief rivers are the Shari from the mountains of Mandara, and the Komadugu from those of Houssa. The climate is excessively hot. The dry season is from April to October, and the rainy season during the remainder of the year. The whole country is flat, and by far the greater part is covered with underwood, coarse grass, and creeping and climbing plants, while around Lake Chad and for a considerable distance west and south it is alluvial and marshy. The chief productions are millet, barley, beans, ground-nuts, maize, cotton, and indigo. The principal wealth of the inhabitants is in slaves and cattle, and the horses of Bornu are greatly prized. The exports are of little importance at present, the trade in gold-dust, civet, and slaves having materially declined of late. The mass of the people are negroes, who profess fetishism, and are divided into tribes speaking different idioms. The dominant race is that of the Kanuri or Kanowri, a people of mixed negro and Tibbu stocks, tillers of the soil, with industrial habits, and skilled in many of the mechanical arts. They have a developed administrative organisation and a fairly advanced military system. Pop. estimated at 5,000,000. Principal towns, Kuka (the former capital, on the W. side of Lake Chad), Ngornau, Dikoa (capital since 1894), Old and New Birni, Mashaena, and Logone. Since Jan., 1900, the greater portion of Bornu has formed part of British Nigeria.

Boro Budor, a vast ruin near Jogyakarta, Java, one of the largest and most striking of the world, rising in six superimposed terraces, and covering an area 530 feet square.

Borromean (bor-ro-mee'an) Islands, a group of four small islands of Italy, in the Bay of Tosa (the W. arm of Lago Maggiore), viz.:

ISOLA BELLA, ee'so-lá bēl'lá, the most celebrated of the group, formerly barren and sterile, was in 1671 transformed by Count Vitaliano Borromeo into an enchanting garden, rising in terraces, in the form of an amphitheatre, enclosing a magnificent palace. The garden, commanding a superb view of the lake and of the lofty mountains in the north, contains fine tropical plants, and the palace is adorned with paintings and statues. The island is one of the most charming spots of the Italian lakes.

ISOLA MADRE, ee'so-lá má'drá, the largest, is covered with orange- and citron-trees and gardens of exotic plants. This is by many considered the pleasantest of all the islands.

ISOLA SAN GIOVANNI, ee'so-lá san jo-ván'nee, or ISOLINA, e-so-lee'ná, is the northernmost, and is occupied by gardens and fertile fields.

ISOLA SUPERIORE, ee'so-lá soo-pá-ree-o'rá, or ISOLA DEI PESCATORI, ee'so-lá dá'e pé-ská-to-ree (i.e., "the Fishermen's Island"), is inhabited by fishermen, whose village covers the whole island.

Borrowdale, a picturesque valley in Cumberland, England, a few miles from Keswick. The once-famous plum-bago mined here is exhausted. The drive from Keswick to Buttermere, passing by Borrowdale, has been described as one of the finest in the kingdom.

Bor'rowstounness', or Borress, bō-nēs', a seaport of Scotland, co. of Linlithgow, on a low peninsula in the Firth of Forth, 17 miles WNW. of Edinburgh. The coal-mines here extend under the Forth, so as almost to meet those of the opposite side. Pop. in 1901, 9100.

Borsa, bōr'shō', a village of Hungary, co. of Maramaros, 47 miles SE. of Saiget. Copper, lead, and silver are mined here. Pop. in 1900, 7758.

Borythènes, the ancient name of the Dniester.

Borzhom, a watering-place of Transcaucasia, Russia, on a branch of the Transcaucasian railway, 80 miles W. by N. of Tiflis.

Borzna, bōr-znā', a town of Russia, government and 45 miles ESE. of Tchernigov. Pop. in 1897, 12,458.

Borzonasca, bōr-zō-nās-kā', a village of Italy, 10 miles NNE. of Chiavari.

Bos, one of the Philippine Islands. See BAUS.

Bosa, bō'sā, a town of the island of Sardinia, 30 miles S. of Sassari, at the mouth of the Terno, on the W. coast. It is a bishop's see and has a cathedral. Its harbor is sheltered by the island of Bosa. Pop. about 7600.

Boscacastle, a village of England, co. of Cornwall, on the Bristol Channel, 4 miles N. of Camelford.

Boscawen, commonly pronounced bōsk'wōin, a post-village of Merrimac co., N.H., in Boscawen township (town), on the Merrimac River and on the Boston and Maine R., 10 miles N. by W. of Concord. It has various manufactures. Pop. of the town in 1900, 1455.

Boscawen Island, a small island of the Pacific Ocean, Navigator's group. Lat. 15° 50' S.; lon. 175° 35' W.

Bosce, a post-hamlet of Onachita parish, La.

Boscobel, an extra-parochial liberty of England, in Shropshire, 6 miles ENE. of Shifnal. The manor-house here was the retreat of Charles II. after the battle of Worcester, Sept. 3, 1651. For greater security, the king passed the next day concealed in a thick oak-tree which grew near, from an acorn of which the present "royal oak," at Boscobel, has sprung.

Boscobel, Westchester co., N.Y. See CRUGERS.

Boscobel, a hamlet of Gloucestershire co., Va., on the Chesapeake and Ohio R., 19 miles W. of Richmond.

Boscobel, a banking city of Grant co., Wis., in Boscobel township (town), on the S. bank of the Wisconsin River and on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul R., 70 miles W. of Madison. It has manufactures of wagons, carriages, farming-implements, furniture, and flour; planing-, saw- and woollen-mills, etc. Pop. in 1900, 1637; of the town, 1775.

Bosco Marengo, bōs'ko mā-rén'gō, a town of Italy, in Piedmont, 7 miles SSE. of Alessandria. Pop. about 2900 (commune, 4000).

Bosco Reale, bōs'ko rē-ā'lā, a town of Italy, just E. of Boscorease. Pop. in 1901, 5991 (commune, 9340).

Boscorease, bōs'ko-trā-kā'zā, a commune of Italy, on the southern declivity of Mount Vesuvius. Pop. of the commune in 1901, 10,254. It is nearly contiguous to the town of Torre dell'Annunziata.

Bosdarros, bōs'dar'no', a village of France, Basses-Pyrénées, 8 miles S. of Pau.

Bos'hof, a district in the W. part of the Orange River Colony, bordering W. on Griqualand West, and NW. on the Transvaal Colony, from which it is separated by the Vaal River. It is an immense bare plain, almost destitute of wood or water. The extremes of heat and cold are excessive. Just across the W. boundary, in Griqualand West, are the Kimberley diamond-mines. Capital, Boshof, a market- and agricultural-centre, 78 miles (direct) NW. of Bloemfontein. Pop. of the town, 330. It has been recommended as one of the best health-resorts of South Africa.

Böding, the German name of BAZIN, Hungary.

Bosjean, bō'shōn', a village of France, Saône-et-Loire, 12 miles N. of Louhans.

Boskoop, bōs-kōp', a village of the Netherlands, South Holland, 9 miles SE. of Leyden.

Boskowitz, bōs'ko-wits', a town of Moravia, 31 miles N. of Brünn. It has a modern castle, the ruins of an old castle, and an old town-hall. Pop. in 1900, 4856.

Bosland, Kan. See WILSON.

Bosna, bōs'nā, a river of Bosnia, which, after a tortuous northward course of 150 miles, joins the Save 24 miles E. of Brod.

Bosna-Serai, capital of Bosnia. See SARAYEVO.

Bos'nia (Serb and Turk. Bosna), a country which, together with the adjoining Herzegovina (on the S.), forms an appendage of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy and is now virtually a part of it, though nominally included in the Turkish Empire. Bosnia and Herzegovina were handed over by the Great Powers at the close of the Russo-Turkish war of 1877-78 to Austria-Hungary, to be held and occupied for an indefinite period. Bosnia, in the broader sense (inclusive of Herzegovina), has an area of 19,700 sq. m. It is bounded on the N. by Croatia-Slavonia, most of the boundary on this side being formed by the Save, on the E. by Serbia, from which it is in great part separated by the Drina, on the SE. by Novipazar and Montenegro, and on the SW. and W. by Dalmatia and Croatia. It is separated from the last two regions by the Dinaric Alps, and is traversed by several ranges, whose general direction approximates to that of the Dinaric chain. These ranges, which bear the general name of Planina, rise to elevations of between 5000 and 7500 feet. They enclose a number of elevated valleys and plateaus, but beyond these the level tracts are mainly confined to narrow strips along the Save and its tributaries. The region is well watered. Several considerable rivers flow northward to join the Save, including the Unna, Vrbas, Bosna, and Drina. The Adriatic receives the Neretva, the principal river of Herzegovina. Half of the surface is covered with fine forests, which abound in all kinds of game, although the number of fur-bearing animals has greatly diminished. Vast quantities of fruit are raised, the plums enjoying a special reputation. There are excellent pastures and many fertile valleys, but the area under cultivation is not very great. Large numbers of cattle, sheep, goats, and swine are reared. Good wines are produced, and the tobacco of Herzegovina is of fine quality. Bosnia possesses large beds of coal, besides which the mineral products comprise iron, silver, quicksilver, etc. There are numerous mineral springs. The climate is on the whole temperate and healthy, although the cold is often severe in the elevated regions, while in parts of Herzegovina the mercury sometimes rises to above 100°. The population of Bosnia and Herzegovina in 1895 was 1,591,636, of whom all but about one-seventh were in Bosnia proper. The great bulk of the inhabitants, Bosniaks and Herzegovinians, belong to the Serb stock, and their speech differs but slightly from the language spoken in Serbia. About 43 per cent. of the people belong to the Oriental Greek Church, and about half as many are Roman Catholics, while one-third of the population are Mussulmans. There are about 8000 Jews. The Gypsies in Bosnia number about 15,000. The Mohammedans, to which class belong the wealthier townspeople and the upper ranks of the rural landholders, are mainly descendants of Slavs, long ago converted to Islam. They call themselves Turks. The inhabitants of Bosnia still cling to a great extent to Oriental dress. The manufactures, which are mainly confined to textiles, leather articles, and metallic wares, produced on a small scale, have begun to expand since the Austro-Hungarian occupation. The Austro-Hungarian government has achieved great results in the way of furthering the economic, as well as the intellectual, condition of Bosnia and Herzegovina, which present a strange blending of Oriental character with modern progressive spirit. There are now several hundred miles of railway in the country. The exports include grain, live-stock, and animal products, staves (of which immense quantities are made), coal, mineral waters, and prunes (to the extent of about 25,000,000 pounds annually). The government of Bosnia and Herzegovina is administered by Cisleithan Austria and Hungary conjointly. The chief towns are Sarajevo (the former Bosna-Serai), the capital and the only town of over 20,000 inhabitants, Mostar (in Herzegovina), Banialuka, Dolina-Tuzla, Bielina, and Travnik.

Bosnia, which for a brief period at the close of the fourteenth century figured as a Slavic kingdom, was permanently conquered by the Turks in 1463. There were bloody insurrections in 1850-51 and 1875-76. The Mohammedans offered a fierce resistance to the Austro-Hungarian occupation in 1878. The speedy extension of the Austro-Hungarian customs sphere so as to include Bosnia and Herzegovina, and the introduction of universal military service in the region, signified the permanent enrolment of the inhabitants among the subjects of the Hapsburgs.

Bos'porus, less correctly written Bosphorus (Turk. Boghas, boğaz; Gr. Βόσπορος,—i.e., "ox-ford," from the myth which represented Io, changed into a cow, as swimming over the strait; L. Bos'porus Thracius), called also the Strait of Constantinople, a narrow passage which connects the Black Sea with the Sea of Marmora and separates Europe from Asia. It is about 18 miles long, and varies in width from less than half a mile to  $1\frac{1}{2}$  miles. The narrowest point is 1800 feet wide. A surface-current sets constantly through it from the Black Sea, running with great violence and rapidity when the wind is from the NE., but hardly perceptible when it blows from the opposite quarter, namely, the SW., and there is a pretty constant reverse-current under this outward flow; maximum depth, 393 feet. The scenery along the banks of the channel is extremely beautiful, with magnificent summer residences, most of them on the Asiatic side, handsome houses and noble gardens being thickly distributed over the vicinity of the strait on both sides. At the narrowest part of the channel, about 8 miles from its southern entrance, stand the two castles or forts called respectively Rumeli Hisar and Anadol Hisar,—the former on the western or European side, and the latter on the eastern or Asiatic side. Both are now well provided with modern ordnance. The Bosporus was in ancient times remarkable for its tunny-fishery, which is still a source of profit. Constantinople stands on its W. side at its outlet, and partly on the Sea of Marmora, opposite Soutari. The Bosporus of Constantinople is called the Thracian Bosporus, to distinguish it from the Chimerian Bosporus, now called the Straits of Yenikale, which gave its name to the ancient Greek kingdom of Bosporus, embracing the Crimes and adjoining regions.

Bosque, bo's'ka, a county in the northeast-central part of Texas, has an area of 978 sq. m. It is bounded on the NE. by the Brasos River and intersected by Bosque River. Capital, Meridian. Pop. in 1890, 14,224; in 1900, 17,390.

Bosque River, Tex., rises in Erath co., runs southeastward through the middle of Bosque co., and enters the Brasos River at Waco. It is about 150 miles long.

Bosqueville, bo's'ka-veel', a post-village of McLennan co., Tex., 6 miles N. of Waco and 1 mile from the Bosque River. Pop. 100.

Bos'sardsville, a post-village of Monroe co., Pa., 7 miles from Stroudsburg. It contains several lime-kilns.

Bosburg, a post-village of Stevens co., Wash., on the Spokane Falls and Northern R., 19 miles from Colville. Gold-, silver- and lead-mining is the chief industry. The banking point is Spokane. Pop. in 1900, 247.

Bossier, bo's'ser' (Fr. pron. bo's'se'), a parish in the NW. part of Louisiana, has an area of 832 sq. m. It is bounded on the W. by Red River and on the SE. by Lake Bistineau. Lake Bodeau is included within this parish. Capital, Benton. Pop. in 1890, 20,330; in 1900, 24,153.

Bossoms, bo's'som', a glacier of the Mont Blanc group, frequently visited from Chamonix.

Bostam', a town of Persia, 40 miles SE. of Astrabad. Pop. about 6000.

Bostan, a town of Asiatic Turkey. See EL-BOSTAN.

Bostic, a post-town of Rutherford co., N.C., on the Seaboard Air Line, about 8 miles SE. of Rutherfordton. Pop. in 1900, 97.

Boston (contracted from Botolphstoun), a municipal and parliamentary borough of England, co. of Lincoln, situated in a rich agricultural district on the estuary of the Witham, 5 miles from the North Sea and 28 miles SE. of Lincoln. The town is divided into two parts by the Witham. Its mediæval parish church (church of St. Botolph, injured by fire in 1900) is the largest without aisles in the kingdom: length, 291 feet; breadth, 99 feet. The tower, 280 feet in height, resembles that of Antwerp cathedral, and forms a landmark visible 40 miles distant. Boston has manufactures of sailcloth, canvas, and sacking, iron-foundries, and shipyards. In the latter part of the Middle Ages it was one of the chief seaports of England. The port has recently been greatly improved, so that large sea-going vessels can unload in the town, whence the navigation is continued to Lincoln by small steamers and barges. Boston returns 1 member to the House of Commons. Pop. in 1901, 15,667.

Boston, a banking post-town of Thomas co., Ga., on the Atlantic Coast Line, 188 miles WSW. of Savannah. Pop. in 1900, 722.

Boston, a post-town of Wayne co., Ind., 7 miles S. of Richmond. Pop. in 1900, 134.

Boston, a post-village of Nelson co., Ky., on the Beech River and on the Knoxville Branch of the Louisville and Nashville R., 35 miles S. of Louisville.

Boston, or Boston Station, a post-town of Pendleton co., Ky., 31 miles by rail S. of Covington. Pop. in 1900, 168.

Boston, a city of the United States, capital of Massachusetts and of Suffolk co., on a bay called Boston Harbor, which forms the inner bight of Massachusetts Bay, at the mouth of the Charles and Mystic rivers. Lat.  $42^{\circ} 21' 30''$  N.; lon.  $71^{\circ} 3' 30''$  W. The original town stood upon a peninsula called by the Indians Shawmut, and by the settlers Tremont or Trimontaine, from the three summits of a conspicuous hill, which, though now much reduced, is still prominent and known as Beacon Hill. The city now includes the island of East Boston (Noddle's Island) and the peninsular suburbs of South Boston and Charlestown, besides the former towns of Dorchester, Roxbury (or Boston Highlands), West Roxbury, and Brighton, with their minor villages of Allston, Jamaica Plain, Neponset, Mattapan, etc. The cities of Quincy, Newton, Cambridge, Somerville, and Chelsea are near suburbs, and there are many large towns (such as Milton, Dedham, Brookline, Watertown, and Everett) in close proximity. Great areas adjoining the original Shawmut have been reclaimed from the harbor and its inlets, so that what was originally the neck of the peninsula is now the widest part of it. These parts are covered with substantial and costly buildings. The city is the terminus of many railroads, of which the principal are the New York, New Haven and Hartford, the Boston and Maine, the Boston and Albany, the Fitchburg, and the Boston, Revere Beach and Lynn R. Numerous bridges over navigable waters, besides the railway bridges, connect the city and suburbs, while East Boston is reached by ferry. Boston is one of the best-built cities in the United States, and has strongly felt the spirit of architectural progress. The streets in the older portion, once singularly irregular in their course, have been somewhat straightened, but are still far from the uniform regularity in many younger towns.

Among the public buildings and institutions are the State House (greatly enlarged in 1889-98), with its conspicuous gilded dome, fronting on the Common (a small but well-kept park of 48 acres, adjacent to which is the Public Garden, reclaimed from the sea and covering 24 acres); the Old State House (built in 1748); Christ Church (1723); Faneuil Hall, the "cradle of American liberty" (1742), rebuilt after a fire in 1761; King's Chapel (1754), the custom-house, Music Hall, the new Symphony Hall, the New England Conservatory of Music, Boston Athenæum (containing the rooms of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences), Lowell Institute, Massachusetts Institute of Technology (one of the best schools of industrial science in the United States), Government Building, Museum of Natural History, Museum of Fine Arts, Horticultural Hall, the buildings of the Massachusetts Historical Society and of the Harvard Medical School (a department of Harvard University), Exchange, and the Public Library, an imposing and sumptuously decorated structure, which was erected in 1888-95 at a cost of nearly $2,500,000. It contains upward of 700,000 volumes, and is the largest free library in the world. Boston stands well in the front of cities with regard to charitable institutions, there being nearly 1000 organizations devoted to charity, relief, beneficence, or mutual aid. Of these the Perkins Institute for the Blind, the Horace Mann School for Deaf Mutes, and the Massachusetts General Hospital have a world-wide reputation. Among the notable churches of the city are Trinity Church (which was fully completed in 1898, and is regarded as one of the finest buildings in America), the Roman Catholic cathedral, and the New Old South Church, in the Italian Gothic style, with a tower 248 feet high, and built in 1874-75. The Old South Meeting-House, built in 1729 on the site of an earlier church, marks the location of some of the most stirring episodes of the early Revolutionary period. A magnificent system of public parks on a vast scale, sweeping around the whole border of the city, has recently been inaugurated. Franklin Park, in West Roxbury, covers 520 acres. Of the handsome avenues and quarters of the city may be mentioned Commonwealth Avenue, one of the finest residence streets of America, 240 feet in width; Beacon Street, the strictly aristocratic street of Boston; the Back Bay, the fashionable west-end, to which the above avenue lead; and the Back Bay Fens. Copley Square, flanked by the Public Library, the Museum of Fine Arts, Trinity Church, and the New Old South Church, presents a striking architectural effect. Among the principal business thoroughfares are Washington, Tremont, and State streets. Several of the railroad stations are imposing structures, notably those known as the Providence, the Northern Union, and the Southern Union Stations, the last-named completed in 1898 at a cost of $14,000,000, and ranking as the largest railway station in the world. It is 810 feet in length and 700 feet in width, and gives accommodation to 23 tracks on the main floor, besides a 14-track loop for suburban service on the lower floor. An elevated railway, operated by electricity, extends through Boston from Roxbury to Charlestown. Associated with the railway service of the city is the remarkable engineering work known as the Subway, a subterranean passage-way completed in 1898 and given over to the use of electric cars. The Shaw Monument (erected to the memory of Robert Gould Shaw, who organized the first colored regiment in the North in the Civil War) is a masterpiece of sculpture by Saint Gaudens. In Charlestown stands the famous Bunker Hill Monument, a granite shaft 221 feet high, erected in 1825-42 to commemorate the battle of Bunker or Breed's Hill, June 17, 1775.

The public school system of Boston is one of the largest and most elaborate to be found anywhere, and embraces institutions of every grade. Special attention is given to art studies in these schools. The higher educational institutions are the Boston University, with various affiliations, and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, already referred to. Although located in its principal seat in Cambridge, Harvard University can justly be claimed to be a part of the educational activity of the city, and probably no other educational institution of the country has done more to uphold a high standard of scholarship and general efficiency in learning. (See CAMBRIDGE.) Boston has long been noted for the interest taken by its citizens in literature, science, and art, and in questions of social and humanitarian bearing. No other city of the Union has exerted so marked an influence in shaping the literature of the new nation, and with no other city are the names of so many men eminent in the arts, letters, and sciences associated.

Boston has varied and extensive manufactures, including machinery, furniture, fertilizers, farm-implements, general hardware, boots and shoes, type, castings, rubber, chemicals, musical instruments, etc., but it is as a trade- and money-centre that she won and has maintained her eminence, ranking next to New York as the most important commercial port of the United States. The value of the foreign trade was, in 1900, about $200,000,000, of which the exports amounted to about $125,000,000. The shoe and leather, wool, fish, ice, publishing, and domestic dry-goods trades, and the refining of sugar are leading interests. Boston takes place immediately after London as the leading wool-market of the world. The harbor of the city is excellent, and the wharves, warehouses, and other shipping facilities are not surpassed. Steamers ply hence to Europe and to the principal ports of the United States, Canada, the West Indies, the Orient, etc. The inner harbor is completely sheltered, not difficult of access, and seldom encumbered with ice. Several large works have been constructed for its defence, Forts Independence, Warren, and Winthrop being of ancient importance. More modern defences have recently been established, and with these have been constructed massive protecting sea-walls on some of the outlying islands. The harbor is about 20 miles long from N. to S., and 8 miles wide from E. to W., and covers 75 sq. m. Among its several arms are the South Bay, Dorchester Bay, and Back Bay, the last of which is an expansion of the Charles River, the principal stream flowing into the harbor. The Mystic and Neponset Rivers also flow into the harbor. The insular suburb of East Boston has extensive manufactures, but is especially important for its docks, wharves, and elevators. Charlestown is the seat of a large United States navy-yard.

Boston was founded by colonists under John Winthrop, governor of Massachusetts Bay Colony, in 1630. It was named after the town of Boston, in England. It early became the seat of a large and profitable commerce, and took an active part in the events which led to the War of Independence. Prominent events in its history have been the expulsion of Governor Andros, 1689; the witchcraft troubles, 1692; the great fires of 1676, 1679, and 1711; the Boston massacre, 1770; the destruction of the tea in Boston harbor, 1773, and the consequent passage of the Boston Port Bill by the British parliament, 1774; the battle of Bunker Hill within the present city limits, 1775; the siege of the town by Washington and the evacuation by the British, 1775-76; the granting of the city charter, 1822; the absorption of the surrounding towns and cities by annexation in 1868 and later; and the great fire of 1872, which covered about 65 acres and destroyed property valued at over $80,000,000. This conflagration led to great changes in the straightening and widening of streets, and the burnt district was rebuilt in greatly improved style.

Few American cities have suburbs with finer natural advantages, and most of the suburban towns are handsomely and substantially built, with pleasant and well-shaded streets. The cemeteries of Mount Auburn and Forest Hills are near the city, and are noted for their beauty and extent. The outer harbor is filled with islands, and the coast of the mainland near the city is gently elevated and rocky, with many picturesque localities, much resorted to in summer. The most-favored pleasure-resort is probably Nahant Beach, forming the southeastern wall of the harbor. Of the immediate suburban neighbors of the city the most beautiful is Brookline, on the SW.

The population of Boston in 1790 was 18,320; in 1800, 24,937; in 1810, 33,787; in 1820, 43,298; in 1830, 61,392; in 1840, 93,383; in 1850, 136,881; in 1860, 177,840; in 1870, 250,526; in 1880, 362,839 (the gain having been in part due to the annexation of adjacent suburbs); in 1890, 448,477; and in 1900, 560,892.

Boston, a post-village of Barton co., Mo. Pop. about 75.

Boston, a post-village of Erie co., N.Y., in Boston township (town), about 20 miles SSE. of Buffalo. Pop. of the town in 1900, 1398; of the village, about 300.

Boston, Clermont co., Ohio. See OWENSVILLE.

Boston, a post-village of Summit co., Ohio, about 12 miles N. of Akron.

Boston, a post-village of Allegheny co., Pa., about 13 miles SE. of Pittsburgh, on the Youghiogheny River, opposite Ellrod station of the Baltimore and Ohio R. Pop. about 700. The banking point is McKeesport.

Boston, a post-hamlet of Williamson co., Tenn., 25 miles S. by W. of Nashville.

Boston, a post-village, capital of Bowie co., Tex., about 10 miles S. of the Red River and 80 miles NNW. of Shreveport, La.

Boston, a post-station of Culpeper co., Va., 10 miles from Culpeper.

Boston, a post-village of Norfolk co., Ontario, on Boston Creek, 11 miles from Brantford. Pop. 300.

Boston Corners, a post-hamlet of Columbia co., N.Y., on the New York Central and Hudson River and the Poughkeepsie and Eastern Rs., 100 miles N. of New York and 37 miles NE. of Poughkeepsie.

Boston Highlands, Mass. See ROXBURY and BOSTON.

Bostonia, a post-village of San Diego co., Cal. It has fruit-packing industries. Pop. about 300. The banking point is San Diego.

Bostonnais, bos'ton'nâ', also called Bostonnais, bâ'ton'nâ', and Croche, krôsh, a river of Quebec, rises in the co. of Quebec and, after a WSW. course of over 60 miles, joins the river St. Maurice. It has many rapids and falls. The LITTLE BOSTONNAIS (Fr. Petite Rivière Bostonnais, peh-tes' re'vee-sin' bos'ton'nâ') rises in the co. of Portneuf, Quebec, and, after a generally W. course of 40 miles through several lakes, joins the St. Maurice a few miles S. of the mouth of the Bostonnais.

Boston Spa, a watering-place of England, in Yorkshire, on the Wharfe, between Wetherby and Tadcaster.

Boston Station, Pendleton co., Ky. See BOSTON.

Bostra, a town of Syria. See BOSRAH.

Bosts Mills, a post-station of Cabarrus co., N.C., 8 miles from Concord.

Bostwick, a post-village of Putnam co., Fla., on the Plant System. The banking point is Palatka.

Bostwick, a post-hamlet of Morgan co., Ga.

Bostwick, a post-village of Nuckolls co., Neb., 7 miles NW. of Superior, its banking point. It is on the Burlington Route. Pop. 150.

Boswell, bôs'well, a banking post-village of Benton co., Ind., on the Lake Erie and Western R., 29 miles W. by N. of Lafayette. Pop. in 1900, 824.

Boswell, a banking post-village of Choctaw Nation, I.T.

Bosworth, or Market Bosworth, a town of England, near the Ashby Canal, 12 miles W. of Leicester. About 2 miles S. of Bosworth, on Aug. 22, 1485, was fought the battle of Bosworth Field, which terminated the Wars of the Roses, Richard III. being overwhelmed and slain by the forces of the Earl of Richmond (Henry VII.).

Bosworth, a post-city of Carroll co., Mo., in the midst of a rich prairie country, on the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé R., 12 miles NE. of Carrollton. Pop. in 1900, 401.

Boswyl, bos'wel, a town of Switzerland, in Aargau, 3 miles NW. of Muri. It is a place of pilgrimage.

Böszörmény, towns of Hungary. See BEREK-BÖSZÖRMÉNY and HAJDÚ-BÖSZÖRMÉNY.

Botafogo, bo-tâ-fô'go, a residential suburb of Rio de Janeiro, 4 miles SW. of that city, on a bay of the same name, communicating with the Bay of Rio. This village is composed of fine country-houses and hotels, ranged in a semicircle around the margin of the bay.

Botallack Mine, a locality of England, on the W. coast of Cornwall, 7 miles W. of Pensance. Here is a noted mine of tin and copper, now disused, and extending 400 feet under the sea. The place is much visited by tourists on account of the remarkable scenery of the coast.

Botany Bay, a bay on the E. coast of Australia, New South Wales, 5 miles S. of Sydney. Lat. 34° S.; lon. 151° 15' E. It is 1 mile wide at its entrance, but farther inland the breadth is 3 miles; length, 5 miles, with good anchorage in from 4 to 7 fathoms of water. It was discovered by Captain Cook in 1770, and derived its name from the new plants then observed on its shores. The beginning of British settlement in Australia was made here in 1787 by the establishment of a penal colony, which was soon transferred to Port Jackson.

Botel Tobago, bo-tel' to-bá'go, an island in the Pacific Ocean, 45 miles SE. of Formosa. South of it is the island of Little Botel.

Brandenburg (Ger. pron. brán'den-bööré'), a province of Prussia, in the centre of the kingdom, bounded N. by Mecklenburg, NE. by Pomerania, E. by the provinces of West Prussia and Posen, S. by Silesia and the kingdom of Saxony, and W. by the provinces of Saxony and Hanover. Area, 15,381 sq. m. It occupies part of the great northern plain of Germany, and has a flat and sandy surface, diversified by numerous lakes. The Rügenberg has an elevation of 748 feet. It is situated in the basins of the Elbe and the Oder, and watered by these rivers and numerous affluents, among which the Warthe, Bober, Neisse, and Weise, affluents of the Oder, and the Havel, Spree, and others, affluents of the Elbe, are navigable. The chief crops include rye, oats, and other grains, potatoes, hemp, flax, tobacco, and hops. Cattle, sheep, swine, horses, and goats are extensively reared. There are large game-preserves and much attention is given to fish-culture. Considerable quantities of coal are mined. Trade is facilitated by numerous canals. Capital, Berlin. Pop. in 1890, 2,542,401; in 1900, 3,107,951. Brandenburg is the nucleus of the Prussian monarchy. The rule of the House of Hohenzollern, the present imperial dynasty of Germany, dates from 1415. At that time the margraves of Brandenburg figured among the imperial electors of Germany. In 1618 the duchy of Prussia was united with the Electorate of Brandenburg. Under the reign of the "Great Elector," Frederick William, 1640-88, Brandenburg, which now had important possessions on the Rhine and in Westphalia, and owned eastern Pomerania and the former sees of Halberstadt and Magdeburg, etc., rose to the position of a great military power. In 1701 the Elector Frederick III. assumed the title of King of Prussia.

Brazil, brá-sil' (Port. pron. brá-seel'; Fr. Brésil, brá'seel'; Ger. Brasilien, brá-see'-le-en; L. Brasil'ia), a republic of South America, occupying nearly one-half of that continent, principally in the torrid zone, is bounded on the N. by the Guianas and the republics of Venezuela and Colombia, on the NE., E., and SE. by the Atlantic Ocean, and on the W., SSW., and S. by Peru, Bolivia, Paraguay, the Argentine Republic, and Uruguay. It extends from lat.  $4^{\circ} 10' N$ . to  $33^{\circ} 45' S$ , and lon.  $34^{\circ} 50'$  to  $74^{\circ} 30' W$ . Its greatest length is about 2600 miles. The coast-line is not deeply indented by bays or inlets, the estuary of the Amazon forming its largest recess. Area, officially estimated at 3,218,150 sq. m. Capital, Rio de Janeiro.

Relief of the Land.—The surface of Brazil may be properly divided into a vast eastern highland or series of plateaus of from 2500 to 3500 feet general elevation, with lofty mountain-summits and ridges rising above these, and of a more extensive lowland, coincident in the main with the valleys of the Amazon and the Paraguay-Paraná system of waters. The eastern highland is chiefly constructed of Archean and ancient Paleozoic rocks, and represents a lofty continental area which has been worn low through long-continued denudation. The states of Minas Geraes, Goyas, and Matto Grosso occupy the loftier parts of the highland, their great plains being known as Campes, Geraes, Taboleiros, etc. Of the more clearly defined mountain-ranges are those that lie not very far from the eastern border, and run more or less parallel with it. Such are the Serra Geral and Serra do Mar, extending between lats.  $23^{\circ}$  and  $30^{\circ} S$ ; the Serra da Mantiqueira, with the peak of Itatiaia, variously estimated at between 9800 and 10,340 feet in elevation, the loftiest summit of the republic; the Serra do Espinhaço, and the Serra dos Aimorés. The magnificent scenery of the Bay of Rio is formed largely by the imposing and serrated summits of the Organ Mountains, whose loftiest elevations probably exceed 7000 feet. A noteworthy summit in the state of Minas Geraes is Itacolumi, about 5750 feet in height, which gives name to the peculiar flexible sandstone known as itacolumite.

The great lowlands, which are comprised in principal part in the Amazon basin, and constitute more than one-half of the area of the republic, occupy a general elevation of less than 600 feet above the sea, but are bordered by cliffs and escarpments which rise 500–1000 feet higher. This vast depression occupies the position of a comparatively recent interior sea, which extended to the foot of the Andes, and its exceedingly fertile soil belongs largely to nearly the latest geological period. It is covered by the greatest continuous extent of forest in the world, and no region of the earth's surface can compare in the luxuriance of its vegetable growth with the bottom plains or Sébas of Brazil. At times of high water this forest land is not infrequently flooded to a depth of 40–50 feet, forming the so-called igapós (flooded forest).

Rivers.—No country exceeds this in the number and magnitude of navigable rivers, which form a complete network and render the most central parts of the republic easily accessible. To Brazil belongs the greater part of the Amazon, which surpasses in volume every other river on the globe. It flows nearly eastward across the great equatorial plain, and it is the only great river whose course is all near the same latitude. It enters Brazil at Tabatinga (more than 2000 miles from its mouth), and is navigable for large vessels in all parts of its course below that point. The principal affluents of the Amazon, which all enter it at a very acute angle, are the Javary, Jurua, Purús, Madeira, Tapajós, and Xingú on the S., and the Rio Negro on the N., several of these streams being of nearly first magnitude, and affording a great extent of navigable waters. The mouths of all these are in Brazil, which also includes the greater part of their courses. The other large rivers are the Tocantins, which flows northward, the São Francisco, which drains the eastern part, the Paraná, which flows southwestward, the Paraguay, a tributary of the Paraná, the Araguay, the Parnahyba, and the Uruguay. These are mostly navigable for steamers. Brazil has no large lakes.

Climate.—This republic is nearly all in the torrid zone. The climate is generally healthy. In the great plain of the Amazon the heat is tempered by immense forests, a large expanse of water, and the trade-wind, which almost constantly blows up the river. This equatorial plain enjoys perpetual summer, and here the year is divided into only two seasons, the wet and the dry. The rainfall is excessive during the wet season, which begins about Dec. 15 and continues nearly six months. The mean annual temperature on the banks of the Amazon is about 81°. Pará, which is one degree from the equator, enjoys an agreeable climate, the maximum temperature of which is 95° and the minimum about 70°, the mean for the year being 79°. In the western portions of the Amazon valley the temperature occasionally rises to 105°. A region of temperate climates is found in the southern highlands, where frosts are not unknown, although snow and ice, even on the loftier summits, are rare and but passing phenomena. Exceptionally severe winter weather, as in 1859, when 30,000 head of cattle are said to have perished in the Lage district of Rio Grande do Sul, has at times proved most destructive. At Rio de Janeiro the mean annual temperature is about 74°, with a maximum of 100° and a minimum of 50°. The prevalent winds of the greater portion of Brazil are the trade-winds, which blow from the east and carry an abundant supply of moisture from the ocean to the interior. The rainfall varies from less than 20 inches on some parts of the coast-border (68 inches at Pará) to between 500 and 600 inches, or perhaps even more, in the deeper portions of the Amazon valley.

Geology and Minerals.—The mountains of Brazil are mostly composed of gneiss and granite. Gneiss is exposed at the cataracts of the Madeira, the Tapajós, the Tocantins, and the Xingú, and it is probable that this rock underlies nearly all the table-lands and highlands, although covered in great part by deposits of Cretaceous and Tertiary age. The valley of the Amazon is remarkable for the uniform character of its geology, presenting few lithological types other than clays and sandstones. In the valley of the upper São Francisco River are limestone caverns containing many bones of extinct animals of the Post-Pliocene period, such as the megatherium, mastodon, and glyptodon. Devonian and Carboniferous rocks are found in parts of the country. Among its mineral resources are diamonds, beryls, rubies, topazes, amethysts, garnets, gold, silver, copper, iron, lead, coal, mercury, and sulphur. The diamond-mines of Brazil are among the most important in the world. The diamond was first discovered in Brazil in 1725, at the site of the city of Diamantina, on the slope of Itambe Mountain, from which location was also obtained the famous Portugal crown stone known as the Braganza (by some authorities stated to be a topaz). Diamond-mining is also carried on in the state of Bahia. Gold is found in quartz, in drift gravel, and in alluvial sands, the most important seat of gold-mining and the richest mines being in the state of Minas Geraes, near Ouro Preto. The output from this state is about 150,000 ounces a year. Most of the mines of Rio de Janeiro and São Paulo have been abandoned, or are but indifferently worked. Iron abounds in nearly all the states. Rich copper-deposits are found in the states of Goyas, Matto Grosso, and Rio Grande do Sul, but little systematic effort has thus far been made to work the ores. Silver is found alloyed with gold at several places. Coal is mined at several points in the S., principally in the state of Rio Grande do Sul, and is of the Carboniferous age, and highly bituminous. It is an excellent gas and steam coal.

Vegetation.—The vegetation is extremely luxuriant, and is composed of a great multitude of species. The great plain traversed by the Amazon and its tributaries is covered by a dense, primeval, and impenetrable forest, in which gigantic trees are entwined, draped, and festooned by parasitical creepers, climbing plants, and lianas. No region in the world produces such a quantity and variety of useful and ornamental timber. The species of palm are particularly numerous, including the useful cocconut and the Carnahuba or wax-palm. Among the leguminous trees are the Brazil-wood, a species of Coccolpitia, which is used as a red dyestuff, and the Andira cubileti, which affords durable ship-timber. Among the other Brazilian trees are several species of rubber or caoutchouc, the rosewood, mahogany, silk-cotton, monkey- or oil-nut, Brazil-nut, etc. The best fruits are the pineapple, mango, alligator-pear, guava, papaya, orange, and anona or custard-apple. The most important plants cultivated for food are coffee, sugar, cacao, rice, maize, bananas, yams, and mandiocca or cassava, which yields farina and tapioca. The last is indigenous, and is the plant on which the Indians and others largely depend for subsistence. The value of the annual product of coffee is much more than that of any other plant cultivated in Brazil. The production in 1898 was 1,530,000,000 pounds, and the export value in 1899 was about $85,000,000, and in 1902, $98,000,000. The export value of rubber was in 1900 about $5,400,000, and in 1902, $33,000,000. The Hez curitibensis, which yields maté or Paraguay tea, is indigenous in the southern districts. Many valuable medicinal plants are natives of this country. Cotton and tobacco are extensively grown. The annual production of cotton is about 250,000 bales (of 400 pounds each). Among the valued native products are sarsaparilla, copal, copaiba, ipecacuanha, pareira brava, jaborandi, piassaba, guarana, etc. The cultivation of tea is an industry of much promise. The greater portion of the elevated campos is treeless, and in many parts supports grass only. There is much savanna country.

Animals.—The number of species of animals is very great. The largest beasts of prey are the jaguar, the puma or cougar, tiger-cat, and ocelot. The forests are tenanted by immense numbers of monkeys, whose habits are arboreal. Several species of deer are found on the open plains. Among the other mammals are the tapir, ant-eater, sloth, armadillo, peccary, capybara, etc., and among reptiles the boa-constrictor, anaconda, and alligator. The Brazilian birds are noted for the beauty of their plumage, especially the parrots, toucans, chattering, manikins, and humming-birds. Of the larger birds of prey are the turkey-vulture and the Brazilian harpy-eagle. The species of fish are exceedingly abundant in the Amazon and its tributaries, the lower waters of which also abound in large turtles, porpoises, and the manatee. Immense herds of cattle and horses are pastured on the plains of the interior. The cattle are caught with the lasso, and killed for the hides and tallow.

Commerce and Industry.—The industries of Brazil are confined almost exclusively to agriculture, mining, and forest products, manufacturing having thus far been but slightly developed. The chief articles of export are coffee, india-rubber, sugar, cacao, raw cotton, hides, and tobacco. The value of the exports for the year 1902 was about $175,000,000. The value of the imports from the United States in 1903 was nearly $11,000,000; of the exports to the states, $67,000,000. The spinning and weaving of cotton have reached large proportions, especially in the southern districts. There were in the republic, in 1902, 63 distinct lines of steam railway, which operated 9370 miles of road.

Government, Races, etc.—The population of Brazil consists of white persons of European descent, negroes, Indians, mamelucos (a mixture of Indians with whites), and mestizos (in whom negro blood is mixed with Indian). The greater number of the negroes, who constitute about one-seventh of the population, were until recently held in slavery, but they are now all free. The gradual emancipation of the slaves was inaugurated in Sept., 1871, when a law was enacted providing that every child born of a slave mother after that date should be free, but obliged to serve the mother's master until 21 years of age. Finally, in May, 1888, an act was passed decreeing immediate and unconditional emancipation. There are large and flourishing German and Italian colonies in the southern part of the republic. The total population in 1890, the year of the last published census, was 14,333,915, of whom 6,302,198 were classed as whites and 1,295,796 as pure Indians.

Prior to 1889 the government of Brazil was an hereditary monarchy, but by a bloodless revolution effected in that year the monarchy was overthrown, the emperor (Dom Pedro II.) exiled, and a republic established under the name of the United States of Brazil. The new government, formed on the model of the government of the United States, comprises executive, legislative, and judicial departments, the first-named consisting of a president, vice-president, and cabinet, the second of a senate (of 63 members) and chamber of deputies (of 212 members), and the third of a federal supreme court and subordinate tribunals. The president and vice-president are elected by the direct votes of the people, and must have an absolute majority of the votes cast. Their term of office is four years. The members of the chamber of deputies are also elected by the voters of the several states, and hold office for three years. Senators are chosen by the state legislatures (three senators from each state) and hold office for nine years. The cabinet is constructed of six departments: finance; justice, interior, and public instruction; war; marine; foreign affairs; and industry, communications, and public works. Twenty states (corresponding to the departments of the late empire and bearing their names) and a federal district compose the federation.

The following table, based on an official estimate, gives the population and area of each state in 1890 (latest census):

The cities having (1890) upward of 100,000 inhabitants were Rio de Janeiro, 522,651 (in 1900, about 750,000); Bahia or São Salvador, 174,412; and Pernambuco or Recife, 111,556.

History.—Brazil was discovered by Vicente Yañez Pinzon, a companion of Columbus, in 1500. In the same year the Portuguese commander Pedro Alvarez Cabral was driven by adverse winds so far from his track that he landed on the coast of Brazil and took formal possession of it for his sovereign. The country was gradually colonized by the Portuguese, who formed a settlement at Rio de Janeiro in 1567. As a result of the seizure of Portugal by Philip II., the Dutch, in the course of the struggle which secured their liberation from Spain, made incursions upon Brazil, treating it as their enemy's possession, and made themselves masters of a considerable part of it in the first half of the seventeenth century. After the re-establishment of Portuguese independence, however, the Dutch found it impossible to maintain their hold on their conquests. When Napoleon invaded Portugal and announced that the house of Braganza had ceased to reign (1807), the Portuguese court retired to Brazil. In 1815 Brazil was raised to the rank of a kingdom and became the head of its own mother country, the monarchy being henceforth styled the United Kingdom of Portugal, Brazil, and Algarve. In 1821 the king, John VI., returned to Portugal, leaving his son Dom Pedro as regent. Revolutionary movements were initiated by many Brazilians, who desired a separation from the mother country. Dom Pedro proclaimed the independence of Brazil in 1822, and assumed the title of emperor. In 1831 he abdicated the throne in favor of his son Dom Pedro II., a minor, who was crowned in 1841, and who enjoyed a prosperous reign until the revolution of 1889, which led to the establishment of the Republic. In 1865 war was declared against Brazil and the Argentine Republic by Lopes, dictator of Paraguay. A bloody struggle ensued of five years' duration, disastrous to Paraguay. Brazil was torn by a civil war in 1893-94.

Brazil, a city, capital of Clay co., Ind., on the Vandallia Line and other railroads, 16 miles ENE. of Terre Haute. Its prosperity is derived chiefly from mines of block-coal and the manufacture of pig-iron. Here are extensive iron blast-furnaces and numerous shafts or collieries of block-coal, which is an excellent fuel for the purpose of smelting iron-ore. Brazil has machine-shops, rolling-mills, and manufactures of turnbuckles, railroad-spikes, mining-machinery, boilers and engines, sewer-pipe, brick and tiles, etc. Pop. in 1890, 5905; in 1900, 7786.

Brazil, a post-village of Appanoose co., Iowa, on the Keokuk and Western R., 7 miles WNW. of Centerville. Pop. about 600.

Brembo, brêm'bo, a river of northern Italy, rises in a series of lakes, between the province of Bergamo and the Valtellina, flows S., and joins the Adda on the right.

Bremen, brá'men (L. Bre'ma), a state of the German Empire, with a republican form of government, styled officially the Free Hanse Town of Bremen. Area, 99 sq. m. It consists principally of a level sandy tract surrounding the city of Bremen, and divided by the river Weser, the towns of Bremerhaven and Vegesack occupying each a small detached territory. The republic of Bremen, with the exception of the Free Port of Bremen and Bremerhaven, has belonged since 1888 to the Zollverein. It sends one representative to the imperial diet and has one vote in the federal council. Capital, Bremen. Pop. in 1900, 224,697, nearly all Protestants.

Bremen, a city and next to Hamburg the principal maritime emporium of Germany, capital of the republic of Bremen, on both banks of the Weser, 59 miles SW. of Hamburg. Lat. of the observatory, 53° 4' 38" N.; lon. 8° 48' 45" E. The city is divided by the river into the old town on the right and the new town on the left bank. In recent times extensive and handsome suburban quarters have arisen, and in none of the other great cities of Germany are the dwelling-houses so largely occupied by single families. In the old town the streets are often narrow and crooked, and the houses are decorated in the style of the Middle Ages. The river is crossed by an old bridge and two modern bridges; the quays are extensive, and the old rampsarts form agreeable promenades. Among the principal buildings are the Protestant (originally Catholic) cathedral, the towers of which have recently been rebuilt, the church of St. Ansgarius, the fine old town-hall (with a seventeenth century Renaissance facade), under which is a famous Ratskeller (containing wine 250 years old), the building of the Chamber of Commerce (sixteenth century), the exchange (a modern Gothic edifice), the Imperial Bank, post-office, trades hall, the Museum, and the building of the Society of Art. The city abounds in interesting old and modern public monuments and statues. Bremen has a vast foreign trade, much of which is conducted at the ports of Bremerhaven and Vegesack. It is a principal port for the shipment of emigrants to America, and is one of the greatest tobacco-markets in the world; it imports also much petroleum. It is the head-quarters of the North German Lloyd steamship lines. The Free Port of Bremen, on the W. side of the Weser, constructed at great expense with the aid of the Imperial government, consists of a basin 6500 feet long, about 400 feet wide, and about 23 feet deep, surrounded by immense warehouses and furnished with the most modern loading and unloading appliances. The city has extensive shipyards, rice-mills (which turn out immense quantities of starch), iron-foundries, machine-shops, petroleum refineries, jute-spinning mills, breweries, distilleries, rope-works, and manufactures of cigar-boxes and tobacco.

Bremen first rose into note about the year 788, when it was made the seat of a bishopric by Charlemagne. Subsequently the see was elevated to the dignity of an archbishopric, which, at the treaty of Westphalia, in 1648, was secularized in favor of Sweden. In the latter part of the Middle Ages the city gradually emancipated itself from the jurisdiction of the archbishops and became one of the most flourishing members of the Hanseatic League. The citizens early embraced the Reformation. After having been in the possession of France for a few years, Bremen was constituted by the Congress of Vienna, in 1815, one of the four free cities of the German Confederation. Bremen was a free port until 1888, when the city, with the exception of a small reservation, the new Free Port, was incorporated in the Imperial Zollverein. Pop. in 1900, 163,292.

Bremen, DUCHY OF (Ger. Hersogtum Bremen, hênt'-sô-toom brá'men), an old duchy of Germany, constituted in the middle of the seventeenth century out of the secularized sees of Bremen and Verden; which the Peace of Westphalia assigned to Sweden. In 1715 it passed into the possession of Hanover, and now forms part of Prussia. Chief towns, Verden and Stade. The town of Bremen was not comprised in it.

Bremerhaven, brá'mer-há'fen, a town of Germany, 34 miles NNW. of the city of Bremen, on the right bank of the estuary of the Weser, at the mouth of the Geeste, in a small detached part of the territory of Bremen, opposite the Prussian town of Geestemünde. It is the port of Bremen, and was founded three-quarters of a century ago for the accommodation of large vessels connected with the trade of that city. It has great docks and is protected by huge dikes. The appliances for loading and unloading ships are of the most advanced type, one of the cranes being capable of carrying a load of 75 tons. One of the dry-docks can accommodate two transatlantic steamers at a time. The harbor is protected by forts, which have revolving iron turrets. The difference between the lowest ebb and the highest flood is 26 feet, but the average rise does not exceed 10 feet. Pop. in 1890, 16,414; in 1900, 20,322.

Brescello, brí-shé'l'lo (anc. Brixell'um), a town of Italy, in Emilia, province and 18 miles NW. of Reggio, on the Po. Pop. about 1000 (commune, 4500).

Brescia, brésh'á (anc. Brixia), a city of Italy, in Lombardy, capital of the province of Brescia, 52 miles ENE. of Milan, on the Garza, at a railway junction. It is a handsome and flourishing city, beautifully situated at the foot of the Alps, and largely supplied with fountains of potable water. The centre of the town is occupied by the Piazza Vecchia, with the magnificent building of the Municipio (the Loggia) and the clock-tower or Torre dell'Orologio. Other important buildings are the new cathedral, entirely of marble, begun in 1604; the old cathedral (the substructure of which dates from the ninth century); baptistry; numerous churches, richly adorned with works of art; the bishop's palace; hall of justice, on the site of an ancient temple; a large theatre; the Broletto (or old palace, now containing the courts of justice), etc. In a Roman edifice, excavated in 1822, a fine museum of antiquities is located. Brescia has a public library (Biblioteca Quiriniana) with a collection of rare MSS. and over 80,000 volumes, a college, an atheneum, and many endowed charitable establishments. At the Porta Venezia is a bronze statue of Arnold of Brescia; beyond the Porta Milano lies the fine Campo Santo. The arms and outlry made here are renowned. Brescia has also manufactures of silk, woollen, and linen fabrics, paper, leather, etc. Its wine enjoys repute.

Brescia was the seat of a school of painting of great merit, to which many eminent artists belonged. The city is of great antiquity, having been the chief town of the Cenomani, a Gallic tribe. In the Middle Ages it rose to be an important city republic. In the fourteenth century it became subject to Milan, and early in the fifteenth it passed under the sway of Venice. Pop. in 1901, 45,454; of the commune, 70,614.

Breslau, bré's'lów (Pol. Wrocław, vrá'ts'láv; L. Bratisla'via), a city of Prussia, capital of the province of Silesia, on the Oder, at the junction of numerous railways, 190 miles SE. of Berlin. Lat. of the observatory, 51° 6' 56" N.; lon. 17° 2' 13" E. It consists of the inner city, divided by the Oder into the former old town and new town, and of 5 encircling suburbs. A branch of the Oder, the so-called Old Oder, extends in a broad curve around the northern half of the city. The Oder forms several islands and is crossed by numerous substantial bridges. The old ramparts of Breslau have long ago been converted into beautiful promenades. Hardly another city in Europe contains so many public squares and open places as Breslau. The principal square, near the centre of the city, is known as the Ring. On it are the old town-hall (Rathaus) and the new municipal building called the Stadthaus. Many of the public squares are embellished with fine works of sculpture. Among the many interesting ecclesiastical structures are the Catholic cathedral, a grand mediæval edifice, extended in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, with splendid paintings and sculptures; the principal Protestant church, that of St. Elizabeth, a mediæval structure restored half a century ago, which has a bell weighing 12 tons and a celebrated organ; the Protestant church of St. Mary Magdalen, with two Gothic towers connected by a lofty bridge; and the new Jewish synagogue, the handsomest in Germany after that of Berlin. Conspicuous among the other buildings are the new City Savings Bank, containing the municipal library of about 150,000 volumes, the university buildings, the new government buildings, the post-office, the old and the new exchange, the imperial bank, the Museum of Fine Arts, the building known as the Belvedere, on the old fortifications, the episcopal palace, the railway stations, and many fine structures devoted to government offices, the courts, and military purposes.

At the head of the educational institutions of Breslau is the Catholic university, known as the Leopoldine. It has a library of over 300,000 volumes and faculties of theology, jurisprudence, medicine, and philosophy. Breslau is the great emporium for the linens of Silesia, and the greatest mart for wool in Germany. It has extensive railway and other machine-shops, iron-foundries, spinning-mills, and manufactures of furniture, carpenters' materials, shoes, clothiers' trimmings, spirits, confectionery, chemicals, etc. It is, after Berlin, the largest city of Prussia. Breslau was ruled in the Middle Ages successively by the kings of Poland, the dukes of Breslau, and the kings of Bohemia. It was wrested from Austria by Frederick the Great in 1741. Pop. in 1811, 63,297; in 1875, 239,060; in 1890, 335,186; in 1900, 422,738,—and with the closely adjoining suburbs, 459,306. Elevation, 390 feet above sea-level.

Brest (L. Brestum; Fr. pron. the same as the English), a city of France, department of Finistère, about 36 miles NNW. of Quimper and 399 miles by rail W. of Paris, on the N. shore of a small gulf called the Road of Brest. Lat. (of observatory) 48° 23' 32" N.; lon. 4° 29' 25" W. It is the strongest maritime fortress of France, and is encircled by ramparts, which, being planted with trees, form agreeable promenades and afford a fine view of the harbor and shipping. From its natural advantages, the extent of its various establishments, and its means of defence, Brest is one of the first naval ports of Europe. The outer road is one of the finest in the world, and has no superior in the safety and excellence of its anchorage. It is estimated that 400 men-of-war could ride at anchor in it at one time. It communicates with the sea by a single passage, called the Goulet, 1750 yards broad, which is furnished with a number of light-houses. In the middle of this channel rise the Mingan Rocks, which contract the entrance and oblige ships to pass immediately under the batteries. From this entrance to the mouth of the Elorn the roadstead is about 6 miles in length. Its diameter varies considerably, from the irregularity of the shores, but in some places it is 3 miles. The inner or military harbor, a long narrow channel, the embouchure of the little river Penfeld, is one of the most secure in the world. At its entrance, perched on a rock 200 feet high, stands the imposing mediæval castle, reconstructed by Vauban. Brest has large basins, extensive quays, an arsenal employing many thousands of men, vast magazines, building-yards, large barracks, and storehouses. The city, built on the slopes of hills, is divided by the military port into two parts, which communicate by bridges; the new town, that on the right of the Penfeld, is called Recouvrance. The upper and lower parts of the town are connected by steep streets, and in some places only by stairs. On the shores of the commercial harbor a new quarter of the town has arisen. Brest has a naval school, a school of hydrography, a botanical garden, a large naval hospital, and an observatory. The trade of the town is not very extensive, and its manufactures, outside of the arsenal, are not large. A telegraph cable extends hence to Duxbury, Mass. Richelieu was the first to take advantage of the natural capabilities of the port for a naval station, and in 1631 commenced the fortifications. Pop. in 1901, 68,751; of the commune, 84,284.

The name of British Central Africa is sometimes applied to the region of northern Zambesia or northern Rhodesia, and also to Rhodesia in general. See RHODESIA and ZAMBESIA.

British Channel. See ENGLISH CHANNEL.

British Channel, in the Frank-Josef Archipelago, E. of Prince George Land. Lon. about 52° E.

British Columbia, a province of the Dominion of Canada, on the Pacific coast of North America, extending from the Rocky Mountains westward, bounded S. by the United States, and limited on the N. by the 60th degree of N. lat. At the head of Smoky River, about lat. 54° 49' N., its E. boundary leaves the Rocky Mountain crest and follows the meridian of 120° W. lon. northward. Area, 372,630 sq. m. It includes Vancouver, Queen Charlotte's, and many minor islands. A large part of its surface is mountainous, the southern half of the province being almost entirely covered by ranges or ridges of the main Rocky Mountains (which form the boundary with Alberta) and the western Coast or Cascade Mountains. Intermediate ranges (Gold, Cariboo, Selkirk) take a trend generally parallel with these (NW.-SE.). Some of the highest summits of the Dominion of Canada, ranging from 10,000 to 13,000 feet, are found on or near the boundary Rocky Mountain chain and in the Selkirk Range. (See ROCKY MOUNTAINS and SELKIRK RANGE.) An elevated plateau extends for some distance westward, over a width of 100 miles, between the Gold and Coast Mountains. British Columbia has numerous rivers, but their courses are largely turbulent, and most of them are not open to continuous navigation for any extended distance. The most important of these are the Columbia and Kootenay, in the S.E.; the Fraser, which traverses a large part of the province in a N. and S. direction, and is its most important stream; the Skeena, the Naas, and the Stikine, the last-named navigable by steamers for about 130 miles from the Pacific. All these streams are tributary to the Pacific Ocean. The Peace and Liard Rivers in the N.E. belong to the Arctic water-shed. Some of the head-waters of the Yukon River are crossed by the northern boundary. British Columbia has numerous lakes (Kootenay, Arrow, Shuswap, Kamloops, Okanagan, Quesnelle), most of which lie longitudinally in the course of traversing rivers. The surface of the country is largely timbered, being especially in the mountain- and coast-regions densely covered with primeval forests of giant conifers. There are, however, extensive cultivable tracts, the major portion of which are to be found in the southern portion of the interior plateau. The mineral resources of the region are very large, and comprise gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, and platinum. Some of the more important mining districts or regions are the Cariboo, Cassiar, Kootenay (Kootenay Lake, Slokan Lake, Trail Creek), and Roseland. Coal is extensively mined at Wellington, Nanaimo, and Comox, on Vancouver Island, but other deposits, lignitic and bituminous, are found elsewhere. The climate of British Columbia is healthful, and more temperate than in other parts of Canada. The extremes of heat and cold are found within the interior or away from the coast. The rainfall on the Coast Mountains and along the Pacific border is high, but it diminishes rapidly towards the interior, and in some parts over the plateau it is reduced to 9 inches or less. British Columbia has an independent parliament and administration, with a lieutenant-governor for its executive head. The legislative assembly (the single chamber) is composed of 38 members. British Columbia has 3 members in the Canadian senate and 7 members in the house of commons. The chief cities and towns are Victoria (the capital), New Westminster, Vancouver, Nanaimo, Roseland, and Trail. Pop. in 1881, 49,459; in 1891, 98,173; in 1901, 178,657, exclusive of wild Indians.

British East Africa, an extensive equatorial territory in the E. part of Africa, comprising the East Africa Protectorate, the Uganda Protectorate, and the islands of Zanzibar and Pemba. It is bounded E. by the Indian Ocean, Abyssinia, and Italian Somaliland, S. by German East Africa and Lake Victoria Nyansa, W. by the Congo Free State and French Ubangi, and merges N. into the Egyptian Sudan and the independent Mohammedan states. The total area comprises probably upward of 1,000,000 sq. m., with a population on the mainland estimated to exceed 5,000,000, of whom hardly more than 700 are Europeans. The region, which is traversed by the upper Nile and watered by the Bahr-el-Ghazal, the Sobat, Tana, and Sabaki Rivers, is largely an elevated plateau (3000-4000 feet), with lofty mountain-masses (Ruwenzori) and isolated volcanic cones (Kenia, Mfumbiro), and contains either in whole or in part Lakes Victoria (Victoria Nyansa), Albert, Albert-Edward, Rudolf, and Stefanie. A large part of the surface, especially of the East Africa Protectorate, is covered with grass and well adapted for ranching purposes. Iron and copper are very abundant in the Uganda region. Railway and telegraphic communication has been extended from the coast to Uganda. (See UGANDA.) The chief commercial products and exports are ivory, rubber, gum-copal, hides, cattle, and goats. The inhabitants are largely Masai and other members of the Nilotic and Sudanese groups of Africans. Capital, Mombasa, with about 27,000 inhabitants. See MOMBASA and ZANZIBAR.

British Empire. See GREAT BRITAIN.

British Guiana (ghe-á-ná), a territory on the N. coast of South America, belonging to Great Britain, and considered to extend from the mouth of the Orinoco, 8° 45' N. lat., as far southward as 0° 45' N. lat., and from about 56° 30' to 61° 50' W. lon., which includes the western disputed region claimed by Great Britain in the Venezuelan boundary rectification, and which was adjudged to the colony by the Paris Arbitration Commission in Oct., 1899. The territory has on the E. Dutch Guiana, S. Brazil, and W. Venezuela. Area, estimated at between 109,000 and 120,000 sq. m. The southern boundary with Brazil, as officially recognized, is formed by the Sierra Acaari, which delimits the basin of the Essequibo River. The Corentyn River forms the boundary with Dutch Guiana. The surface of the country near the ocean is a rich alluvial flat, extending in mud banks into the sea, and inland from 10 to 40 miles, then ascending by successive terraces to the Sierras Pacaraima and Acaari, on the SW. and S. frontiers. Mount Roraima, at one time thought to have an inaccessible summit, rises on the western border to a height of 8640 feet—the culminating point of the Pacaraima range and of the entire colony. The principal rivers are the Essequibo (with its tributaries, the Cuyuni and Mazaruni), Demerara, Berbice, Corentyn, and Barima. The Essequibo, the longest, is about 600 miles in length, but its course is rendered almost unfit for navigation by rapids. The other main streams are navigable for a hundred miles or more above their mouths. On the low grounds the climate is unhealthy. Dense forests clothe the interior. There are two rainy seasons on the coast and the rainfall is very heavy, the annual precipitation being from 130-140 inches. In the interior there is only one rainy season,—from April till the middle of August. The temperature ranges from 75° to 90°; mean temperature of the year, 81°. The vegetation is luxuriant. Rice, sugarcane, corn, wheat, cacao, vanilla, tobacco, and cinnamon are raised. The exports consist chiefly of sugar, rum, molasses, timber, shingles, and cotton,—considerably more than half of which are sent to Great Britain. Gold-mining is a moderate industry. The government is vested in a governor, council, and the orders of the sovereign in council. The colony is divided into the counties of Demerara, Berbice, and Essequibo. Chief towns, Georgetown (the capital) and New Amsterdam. Pop. in 1899, 286,232. The inhabitants comprise about 7000-10,000 native Indians, about 200,000 Africans and Asiatics (East Indians),—nearly equally distributed,—and the balance mainly Europeans (English and Portuguese). There are 104 miles of railroads in the colony, one line uniting Georgetown with Mahaica.

British Hollow, a post-village of Grant co., Wis., in Potosi township, 12 miles W. by S. of Plattville.

British Honduras, or Balize, bá-lees' (Mexican-Spanish, Balisa, bá-lees'), said to have been named from one Wallis, a buccaner), a British crown colony of Central America, bounded N. by the state of Yucatan (Mexico), from which it is separated by the Rio Hondo, E. by the Gulf of Honduras, S. by Guatemala, and W. by Guatemala. Area, 7560 sq. m. The coast is low and swampy, fenced from the open sea by lines of keys and islands. The W. and S. frontiers are mountainous, and dense forests abound. The Balise is the principal river. Mahogany, logwood, and sugar are leading exports. Agriculture is in its infancy. The climate is hot, moist, and unhealthy for white people, yet there are few epidemics, while earthquakes and hurricanes are unknown. The colony has a lieutenant-governor, assisted by a legislative and executive council. Chief towns, Balise (the capital) and Corozal, in the extreme N. Pop. in 1891, 31,471; in 1899, 35,226; in 1901, 37,500.

British India. See INDIA.

British Isles, an archipelago off the W. shore of the continent of Europe, from which it is separated by the English Channel, the strait of Dover, and the North Sea. The surrounding waters are in general shallow. There is sufficient evidence to show that in comparatively recent (geological) times the islands and islets, which all told number upward of 5000, were part of the continental main. See GREAT BRITAIN, ENGLAND, SCOTLAND, WALES, IRELAND, HEBRIDES, ORKNEYS, etc.

British New Guinea, a British possession in the SE. part of the island of New Guinea, extending from East Cape, in about lon. 150° 55' E., to the furthest position on the river Fly on the W., about lon. 140° 45' E. It also includes the D'Entrecasteaux, Louisiade, and other islands, and has a total area of about 90,540 sq. m., with a population estimated at 350,000, of whom less than 400 are Europeans. It has Dutch New Guinea on the W. and German New Guinea (Kaiser Wilhelms-Land) on the N. A large portion of the western section of the region is hardly more than tide-level flat, but eastward the surface becomes ruggedly mountainous, the great Owen Stanley Range forming a ridge or backbone over a linear extent of 250-300 miles or more. Its loftiest summit is Mount Owen Stanley, or Victoria, 13,121 feet in height; other impressive elevations are Mount Scratchley, 12,250 ft.; Mount Albert Edward, 12,550 ft.; Mount Douglas, 11,796 ft.; and Mount Suckling, 11,226 ft. Mount Yule, in the western portion of the range, is a volcanic peak, 10,048 ft. high. The only important river is the Fly (with its tributary, the Strickland), which has been ascended by boats for upward of 600 miles from its mouth. The tidal influence is exerted to a point 150 miles from the sea, where the river is still 600 yards in width and 40 feet in depth. Much of the region is still imperfectly known, and there are but few settlements of foreigners. Agriculture has been little attempted. The region exports pearl-shell, trepang, copra, and timber, and there is some promise for rubber and coffee growths. Gold is worked in some parts. The seat of government is Port Moresby, on the southern coast, which is also the head-quarters of the London Missionary Society.

British North Borneo, a territory occupying the northern part of Borneo, under the jurisdiction (with Labuan and the minor islands of Banguey and Balam-bangan) of the British North Borneo Company, and administered by a governor. Area, 31,106 sq. m. It borders W. on the China Sea, NE. on the Sea of Mindoro, and E. on the Sea of Celebes, and has over 900 miles of coast-line. The surface is mainly jungle, though mountainous in the interior, the non-volcanic summit of Kinabalu, which is seemingly the highest elevation of the entire island, rising to 13,690 feet. (See BORNEO.) The region has good bays and harbors, but is deficient in rivers. The rainfall at Sandakan is 124 inches. The region produces timber, sago, rice, tapioca, gums, coffee, pepper, gambier, gutta-percha, sweet potatoes, tobacco, etc., exporting also wax, edible birds'-nests, cocoanuts, seed-pearls, trepang, etc. Chief town, Sandakan (or Elopura), on Sandakan Bay, E. coast; it is accessible to the largest vessels. Pop. 7000; of the possession, 175,000.

British Somaliland (so-maw'-le-land), a protectorate on the N. coast of the E. horn of Africa, bordering on the Gulf of Aden. Area, about 68,000 sq. m. - It exports skins and hides, ostrich feathers, cattle, sheep, and gums. Chief town, Berbera, on the coast. Other considerable towns are Zeila and Bulhar. Pop. Mohammedan and mainly nomadic; number unknown.

British Sound, Madagascar. See DIEGO SAURIEZ.

British South Africa, or Southern Rhodesia, a territory in South Africa, between the Limpopo River on the S. and the Zambezi on the N., and composed of the two provinces of Matabilland and Mashonaland, with a combined area of 192,000 sq. m. and a pop. of about 450,000, of whom about 12,000 are Europeans. The minerals include gold in extensive fields, silver, zinc-blende, copper, tin, antimony, arsenic, lead, and coal. A railway from the Cape penetrates to Bulawayo (part of the projected "Cape to Cairo" railway), with branches to Salisbury and the Victoria Falls, and Salisbury is connected by rail with Beira, on the coast of Portuguese East Africa. Telegraph and telephone systems are in operation. The region has been developed by the British South Africa Company, under the administration of which all Rhodesia is operated. Capital, Salisbury. See RHODESIA.

British South-Central Africa, a collective name for the vast territory in south-central Africa which is composed of the divisions known as South Bechuanaland, the Bechuanaland Protectorate, Rhodesia, and British Central Africa (Protectorate).

Brittany (Fr. Bretagne, brèh-tân'), an old province in the NW. of France, forming an extensive peninsula between the English Channel and the Atlantic Ocean, now comprised in the departments of Finistère, Côtes-du-Nord, Morbihan, Ille-et-Vilaine, and Loire-Inférieure. Its people are largely Celts, of the Cymric branch, and in the first three of the above-mentioned departments generally speak the Armorican (or Breton) language, which resembles the Welsh. The rough and harsh character of the country, the picturesque ruins, the curious ancient monuments (telling of Druidic times), the quaint old towns, and, above all, the appearance and speech of the rude but upright and fearless Breton peasantry, who cling to their traditions and superstitions, combine to render Brittany one of the most interesting regions in Europe. The Breton fishermen and sailors are noted for their bravery. Among the chief towns of the region are Brest, Rennes, Saint Malo, and Vannes. Brittany was known to the ancient Romans as Aremorica (Armorica). At the time of the decline and downfall of the Roman Empire there was an influx of Celtic immigrants from Britain into the region, which received the name of Little Britain, or Brittany. In the Middle Ages Brittany was generally independent under its counts and dukes. It was for a time an object of contention between England and France. The marriage of the Duchess Anne with Charles VIII., in 1491, made it a part of France. It was allowed to retain extensive liberties. In the Revolution its people rallied to the support of royalty.

Brooklyn, a former city of Kings co., N.Y., since Jan. 1, 1898, a borough of the city of New York, situated at the W. end of Long Island. Lat. of the navy-yard, 40° 41' 30" N.; lon. 73° 59' 30" W. The borough is coextensive with Kings county. A strait called the East River, in its narrowest part about a half mile in width and connecting Long Island Sound with the upper New York Bay, separates Brooklyn from Manhattan Island, while the navigable Newtown Creek separates it from Long Island City (now a part of Queens borough of the city of New York) on the N. and NE. The northern part of Brooklyn consists of the former city of Williamsburg and the town of Greenpoint. In the west central part of the city is a debouchment of the East River known as Wallabout Bay, on the E. and S. shores of which is located the United States navy-yard. Brooklyn covers an area of about 65 sq. m., the most distinctive topographic feature of which is constituted by the Brooklyn or Columbia Heights, which rise abruptly above the shore of the East River to an elevation of 70-100 feet, and on which are located many of the most elegant mansions, residences, and club-houses (Hamilton, Jefferson, Brooklyn) of the city. The most fashionable streets of the Heights are Clinton, Remsen, Montague, and Pierrepont. The principal business street of Brooklyn is Fulton Street, which terminates near the great Brooklyn Bridge, which unites the borough with the lower part of New York city proper. Near the extreme southern end of the city, situated upon a high ridge and overlooking Gowanus Bay, New York Bay, and New York city, with views of Jersey City and Staten Island, is the famed Greenwood Cemetery, covering 475 acres; while on the same ridge is situated Prospect Park, covering 520 acres, which, with the magnificent boulevards connected with it (forming a continuous drive to the beach at Coney Island) and the handsome streets adjoining, forms the most attractive portion of the borough. Washington or Fort Green Park, in the older section of Brooklyn, is a charming pleasure-ground. In the district of East New York is Ridgewood Reservoir, from which Brooklyn receives its main supply of water.

Numerous lines of steam ferry-boats connect the various sections of Brooklyn with New York proper, and other lines connect it with Jersey City. The East River Suspension Bridge, commonly known as the Brooklyn Bridge, was opened May 24, 1883, and gives accommodation to railway-traffic as well as foot-passage and carriages. It has a total length of 5987 feet, with a central span of 1595 feet and a breadth of 85 feet. The height above the water is 135 feet. The total cost of construction, involved in a period of 13 years (1870-83), was about $15,000,000. Another suspension bridge to unite New York with Brooklyn, about 1 mile to the N.E. of the Brooklyn Bridge, was begun in 1897, and opened in 1904. Its dimensions are much larger than those of the older bridge, there being accommodations for 6 railway tracks, in addition to the carriage-ways and walks. A third bridge between these two is now (1905) in course of construction, and the East River is being tunneled at a great depth. Brooklyn is the terminus of branches of the main Long Island railway system, connecting it with Greenport and Sag Harbor and all the principal points on Long Island. The system of street and suburban railways, including several lines of elevated roads, is very extensive. Freight-cars are also brought to the Brooklyn docks and warehouses by floats and steam-tugs, great numbers of which are employed in this business.

The Atlantic Dock, on Buttermilk Channel, opposite Governor's Island and 1 mile S. of Fulton Ferry, and the Erie and Brooklyn Basins, all in South Brooklyn, are among the most extensive works of the kind in the United States, and are lined with immense storehouses for grain and other freight. The Atlantic Dock or Basins, erected by a company incorporated in 1840, embraces within its piers 40.86 acres. The Erie and Brooklyn Basins have areas respectively of 60 and 40 acres. The United States navy-yard occupies about 45 acres of ground. It is the chief naval station of the United States, and employs over 2000 men. Associated with it are two dry-docks, having lengths of 465 feet and 307 feet respectively. Near the navy-yard is the huge Wallabout Market, erected of brick in the Dutch style. The manufacturing interests of Brooklyn are large and varied. The refining of sugar and petroleum, the milling of coffee and spices, ship-building, meat-packing, and the storage of freight are great industries. There are numerous large chemical-works, and factories for making glass, clothing, caps, carpets, cordage, paints, linseed oil, oil-cloth, pharmaceutical preparations, metallic wares, tobacco, cigars, castings, steam-boilers, hats, wire, lace, buttons, paper, and felt goods.

Among the public buildings and institutions are the court-house, the old city-hall, the new borough hall, Academy of Music, with a seating capacity of 2400, Academy of Design, Brooklyn Library (containing 160,000 volumes), Pratt Library and Institute (one of the best-equipped technical institutions of the country, attended by upward of 3000 students), Long Island Historical Society (with a library of 70,000 volumes), Packer Collegiate Institute (female), Polytechnic Institute, and the Brooklyn Institute. The last-named, with a building about 425 feet square, occupies a site in Prospect Park, and contains 25 departments devoted to the study of the arts and sciences. The charitable institutions are very numerous. Brooklyn has upward of 450 ecclesiastical edifices, and has frequently been designated the "City of Churches." Its most famous church, and one that is perhaps best known throughout the whole United States, is Plymouth Church.

On Aug. 27, 1776, the battle of Long Island, so disastrous to the American forces, was fought upon ground now within the limits of Prospect Park; and at Wallabout Bay, during the Revolutionary War, were stationed the English prison-ships, in which it is said nearly 12,000 Americans perished from close confinement and other ill-treatment. The King's Highway, the road by which the British marched from Gravesend Bay, near the suburban town of Bensonhurst, is now a favorite driveway.

Brooklyn was incorporated in the year 1646 by the authorities of New Amsterdam, and named Breukelen, from a town of the same name in the Netherlands. It was incorporated as a village in 1816, and as a city, with the same area, 6 miles long and 4 miles wide, in 1834. In 1855, Brooklyn, Williamsburg, and Bushwick were united under one government. In 1894 the city was made coextensive with Kings county, and in Jan., 1898, united with the city of New York to constitute the borough of Brooklyn. The number of its inhabitants in 1810 was 4402; in 1820, 7175; in 1830, 15,395; in 1840, 34,233; in 1850, 96,838; in 1860, 266,661; in 1870, 396,099; in 1880, 566,663; in 1890, 806,343; in 1900, 1,166,582.

Bruges, bru'jis (Fr. pron. brühsh; Dutch, Brugge, brug'ghen,—i.e., "bridges;" Ger. Brügge, brüg'ghen; L. Brugæ), a city of Belgium, capital of the province of West Flanders, at the junction of several large canals, 56 miles NW. of Brussels and 14 miles by rail E. of Ostend. It owes its name to the number of bridges (upward of 50) which cross its canals. The city to a great extent presents a mediæval appearance. Its many quaint old houses, with their decorated façades, and its splendid churches and other public edifices, standing on streets and squares once bustling with life, but now comparatively deserted, are memorials of the time when Bruges was one of the proudest cities of Christendom. Among the most remarkable buildings are the mediæval edifice known as Les Halles (cloth- and meat-halls), with its famous belfry, 353 feet high, and magnificent chimneys; the old town-hall, recently restored, containing the municipal library of 100,000 volumes; the church of Notre Dame, with its lofty spire and the tombs of Charles the Bold and his daughter, Mary of Burgundy; the cathedral of St. Sauveur, with its fine interior ornamentation and paintings; St. John's Hospital, more than 500 years old, containing some of the masterpieces of Memling; the Episcopal seminary (the former Abbey of the Dunes); and the Palais de Justice. Bruges possesses fine old and modern sculptural monuments. The manufactures include lace, textiles, and tobacco, and there are breweries, distilleries, and ship-building yards. The trade of the town is considerable. In no large city of western Europe is the proportion of indigent persons in the population so great as in Bruges.

In the ninth century Bruges was fortified by Baldwin of the Iron Arm, first Count of Flanders; and it was first walled in 1053. Early in the fourteenth century the city had waxed rich and powerful, and in the Hanseatic League it took the leading rank as the central mart of middle northern Europe. Under the house of Burgundy, Bruges still increased in riches and power. In 1430, Philip the Good here instituted the Order of the Golden Fleece. In 1489, Bruges rose in rebellion against Maximilian of Austria and laid hands on his person. The severe measures of repression which ensued gave a blow to the city's prosperity, which had already been affected by the rise of Ghent and Antwerp, and its ruin was afterwards nearly completed by the Duke of Alva. Its population once exceeded 200,000. Pop. in 1891, 47,672; in 1901, 52,867.

Brugg, brögg, or Bruck, bröck, a village of Switzerland, canton of Aargau, on the Aar, 9 miles NE. of Aarau. Brunei, broo-ní', a decayed Mohammedan sultanate and town on the NW. coast of Borneo, between Sarawak and British North Borneo. The state is under British protection. Its trade is unimportant, but some of the manufactured articles of gold and brass are famed and of beautiful workmanship. The chief town and residence of the sultan is Brunei, situated on a lake-like expansion of the Limbang or Brunei River, about 15 miles from its mouth. It is constructed entirely on piles, and has the water-ways largely crowded with craft of all kinds. It has not inaptly been called the "Venice of the East," although the finest houses, including the sultan's residence, are hardly more than barns.

Brumet, brü'ná', an island at the entrance of Fortune Bay, Newfoundland, 26 miles NE. of Miquelon. It has a light-house.

Brünn, brünn (Slavic, Brno), a fortified city of Austria, capital of Moravia, on a declivity at the confluence of the Schwarzwasser and the Zvittawa, 70 miles N. by E. of Vienna and 116 miles SE. of Prague. It lies at the base of the Spielberg, which is crowned by an old citadel, long used as a prison, and noted as the place of confinement of Silvio Pellico. Lat. 49° 11' N.; lon. 16° 40' E. The inner or old town is separated by boulevards and cultivated grounds—laid out on the site of the former ramparts—from the modern suburban quarters. The inner town has narrow and irregular streets, but the modern quarters have stately buildings. Brünn has interesting mediæval churches, some of which have been restored in modern times, and a beautiful synagogue in the Moorish style. Among other prominent edifices are the new Landhaus, or hall of the Landtag, the old town-hall, the museum of the industrial arts, the polytechnic institute, the barracks (a vast pile, formerly a Jesuit college), and a new theatre—the first of its kind on the continent to be lighted by electricity. The woollen-industry of Brunn is on a large scale. The other manufactures include machinery, metallic wares, leather, and leather goods. The town has an active trade and important fairs. In the vicinity are populous manufacturing villages. Elevation, 745 feet above the sea. Pop. in 1890, 82,660; in 1890, 95,342; in 1900, 108,944.

Brunswick (Ger. Braunschweig, bröwn'shëw'ig), DUCHY or, one of the states of the German Empire. It consists of three larger and six smaller divisions, detached from one another and enclosed within other states. The principal division, containing Brunswick (the capital) and the towns of Wolfenbüttel and Helmstedt, is of a compact and oval form, with the exception of a narrow strip towards the NE. On the N., W., and SW. it is surrounded by the Prussian province of Hanover, and on the S. and E. by Prussian Saxony. The second largest division, containing the towns of Gandersheim and Holzminden, is a long, irregular belt stretching from E. to W. across South Hanover, and bounded on the E. by Prussian Saxony and on the W. by Westphalia, Hanover, and Waldeck. To the SE. of this division lies the third, with the town of Blankenburg, also irregular in shape, traversed by the Harz Mountains and surrounded by territories almost entirely Prussian. The smaller divisions are within Prussian territory. The united area is 1426 sq. m.

The surface of Brunswick is mostly mountainous or hilly. The country is drained by the Weser and its tributaries—among which are the Aller, Leine, and Oker—and by some small tributaries of the Elbe. Some parts of the duchy yield rich crops; in others the rearing of live-stock receives great attention. The growing of fruit and vegetables is extensively carried on. There is a large area of forest land, mainly the property of the state. Brunswick is rich in mineral wealth. Coal, iron, and lead are mined in considerable quantities. Other mineral products are gold, silver, antimony, zinc, copper, sulphur, vitriol, alum, asphalt, marble, alabaster, limestone, gypsum, potters' clay, asbestos, agate, jasper, and salt. The population of the duchy was, in 1875, 327,493; in 1890, 403,773; in 1900, 464,251. The people are nearly all Protestants. Brunswick is represented by 2 members in the federal council of the German Empire and sends 3 members to the Reichstag.

Brunswick rose into prominence with Henry the Lion, Duke of Saxony and Bavaria, with whom the house of Guelph (Welf) reached the height of its power. When that prince succumbed to the emperor Frederick Barbarossa in 1181, he was allowed to retain possession of Brunswick. In 1235, Brunswick, with Lüneburg, was erected into a duchy for a grandson of Henry. The possession of the Guelphs underwent endless divisions and subdivisions, until finally there were the two duchies of Brunswick-Lüneburg and Brunswick-Wolfenbüttel. In 1692 the dominions of the Duke of Brunswick-Lüneburg were erected into the Electorate of Hanover. On the extinction of the elder line of the house of Brunswick-Wolfenbüttel in 1884, the claims of the Duke of Cumberland, the head of the Hanover line, were set aside by the federal council of the German Empire on the ground that his reign would be incompatible with the peace of the Empire. The people of Brunswick acquiesced, and in 1885 the regency was handed over to Prince Albert of Prussia. The house of Brunswick-Lüneburg (Hanover) ascended the throne of England in 1714, in the person of George I.

Brunswick (L. Brunopolis), a city of Germany, capital of the duchy of the same name, 35 miles SE. of Hanover. Lat. 52° 16' N.; lon. 10° 31' E. Hardly another large city of Germany has to so great an extent preserved its mediæval aspect as Brunswick. Many of the dwellings, with their richly carved wooden façades, are from 300 to 400 years old. The most prominent of the numerous and splendid mediæval churches is the cathedral, the erection of which was begun in 1173 by Henry the Lion, the famous Guelph ruler, with whose history the city is closely associated, and whose tomb, with those of many of his successors, is in the edifice. Among other interesting buildings are the exquisite Gothic town-hall of the old town, the town-hall of the new town, the new ducal palace, which is crowned by a magnificent quadriga, the famous Gewandhaus (trades-hall), with its richly ornamented façade, the old municipal weigh-house, the grand railway-station, and infantry barracks. The old ramparts have been converted into promenades and lovely gardens, among which is the ducal park, with a new court theatre. Brunswick abounds in interesting and beautiful mediæval and modern monuments, among the latter being the statues of Lessing, Gauss, and Abt. The city contains various museums, at the head of which is the ducal museum of art and a technological institute of a high order. The industries of Brunswick are very varied, comprising the manufacture of machinery, boilers, sewing-machines, safes, pianos, sugar, chocolate, carpets, etc., jute-spinning, and the preparation of food-stuffs. There are also iron-foundries, chemical-works, tanneries, distilleries, and type-foundries. The town has an extensive trade, but its once-famous fairs have lost their importance. Brunswick was one of the leading members of the Hansatic League. Pop. in 1875, 65,938; in 1890, 101,047; in 1900, 123,177.

Brunswick, a county in the SE. part of North Carolina, has an area of 812 sq. m. It is bounded on the S. by the Atlantic Ocean and on the E. by the Cape Fear River. Capital, Southport. Pop. in 1890, 10,900; in 1900, 12,657.

Brunswick, a county of Virginia, bordering on North Carolina, has an area of 529 sq. m. It is intersected by the Meherrin River and bounded on the NE. by the Nottoway River. Capital, Lawrenceville. Pop. in 1890, 17,245; in 1900, 18,217.

Brusa, bro'us, written also Brossa (Turk. Bursa; anc. Prusa), a city of Turkey, in Asia Minor, capital of the vilayet of Khodavendikyar (or of Brusa), at the N. foot of Mount Olympus (Keshish-Dagh, about 8300 feet high), 57 miles SSE. of Constantinople. Pop. estimated at about 90,000. It is beautifully situated on the edge of a fruitful plain, and with its many minarets, its kiosks and gardens, and its groups of cypresses, it presents externally a charming picture. In the midst of the city, on a steep eminence, is an old ruined citadel. Some of the mosques, of which there are about 150 (many of them in ruins), are splendid structures. In and around the city are the tombs of the sultans who laid the foundations of Ottoman greatness, as well as the burying-places of numberless Turkish worthies. The sulphur baths of Brusa have long been famous; they are of various kinds and temperatures, and mostly under cover of fine buildings. The town is the seat of a Greek metropolitan and of an Armenian archbishop. Brusa is one of the most flourishing commercial emporiums in the Turkish dominions, and a thriving industrial centre. Its principal trade is in raw silk, and silk-spinning and silk-weaving are the leading industries. There are other textile manufactures, and meerschaum, obtained in the vicinity, is made into pipe-bowls. The town has fine bazars and numerous khans. The trade by the sea is carried on from the port of Mudania, with which Brusa is connected by railway. Brusa was anciently the capital of Bithynia, and after the capture by Orkhan it was for a time the capital of the Turkish sultans until Amurath removed his seat of empire to Adrianople. It suffered severely in 1865 from a long succession of earthquake shocks.

Brus'sels (Dutch, Brussel, brüs'sel; Fr. Bruzelles, brü'sëll; L. Bruzel'la; Ger. Brüssel, brüs'sel), capital of Belgium and of the province of Brabant, on the Senne, at the junction of several railways and canals. Lat. of the observatory, 50° 51' 11" N.; lon. 4° 22' 10" E. Brussels is the most important city in the kingdom. It is remarkable for the number and richness of its ancient buildings, and from the elegance of its new quarters it ranks among the finest cities of Europe. It consists of an upper or new and a lower or old town, the former of which, with the modern Quartier Léopold, is the fashionable quarter and contains the royal palace, the government offices, and the finest streets and hotels; it is well supplied with water, and has many richly sculptured fountains. The lower town, with its medieval guildhouses and the magnificent Hôtel de Ville facing the large market-place, is devoted almost entirely to industry and commerce, and is in marked contrast to the newer development of the city, of which the broad and elegant boulevards are perhaps the most conspicuous feature. The so-called "Inner Boulevards," constructed in part over the bed of the Senne for a length of 1½ miles, date from 1867-71, and intersect the lower town in various directions. The focus of the busy and fashionable life of the city is found in the Place Royale and its adjacent streets (Rue Royale, Rue de la Régence, etc.) and park, the last a former dual hunting-ground, laid out in its present form subsequent to 1774. Of the ancient fortifications no relic remains except the Porte de Hal, a baronial-looking barbican, erected late in the fourteenth century, which long served in later days as a prison.

The principal squares of the city are the Place Royale, Place de la Monnaie, with the theatre, Place des Martyrs, Place de Brouckere, with its large fountain erected in 1897, Place Roupepe, Place du Frêne, and the Grand Place in the lower town, on which is the Hôtel de Ville, one of the finest medieval squares in Europe. Among the more important modern buildings are the royal palace, the Palais des Académies, formerly the palace of the Prince of Orange and now housing the royal academies of sciences, arts, medicine, and letters, the palace of the nation, serving for the sittings of the senate and chamber of deputies, the national bank, conservatory of music, the palace of the fine arts (built in 1876-81, and containing a most valuable collection of paintings and sculptures), exchange, and the Palais de Justice, the last-named, built in 1866-83, being the largest architectural work of the nineteenth century, and one of the most imposing of modern structures. It is built in the Græco-Roman style, and stands upon a quadrangular block measuring 590 by 560 feet. The cost of construction was 45,000,000 francs. The ancient buildings comprise the Hôtel de Ville (in the grand hall of which the abdication of Charles V. took place in 1555), one of the noblest buildings of the kind in Europe, with a spire of open stone-work 364 feet in height; several churches, in general decorated with rich sculptures and paintings, the finest of which is the cathedral of Ste. Gudule, begun about 1220, and celebrated for its painted glass, numerous statues, and finely carved pulpit; the church of Notre Dame de la Chapelle, commenced in 1134, and that of Notre Dame des Victoires, founded in 1804; the Broot-Huy, or old Hôtel de Ville, and several gates of the ancient walls. Three miles N. of the park is the country palace of Laeken. Brussels has numerous and excellent institutions of public instruction, chief among which are the free university (founded in 1834, and attended by upward of 1000 students) and the polytechnic school, founded in 1873, with about 1600 enrolled students. The royal library contains upward of 450,000 volumes. Among its rich scientific and literary institutions are the astronomical observatory, one of the finest in Europe, the general depot for the archives of the kingdom, the museum of natural history and antiquities, and an excellent botanical garden. The private collections comprise the library of the Bollandists and that of the geographical establishment of Vandermaelen, with a rich collection of maps.

Brussels is one of the great centres of Belgian industry, and it is still celebrated for its lace, considered the finest in the world; its other chief manufactures are of fine linens, silk, woollen and cotton fabrics, gold and silver embroidery, bronzes, leather, gloves, paper, machinery, jewelry, and mathematical and musical instruments. It has also establishments for coach-building and cabinet-making, manufactures of chemical products, soap, porcelain, and crystal, and extensive sugar-refineries and breweries. The making of "Brussels carpets" is not an industry of the city. The city has many large typographical and lithographic establishments, which are largely employed in the reprinting of works published in France.

The Emperor Otho I. dated a decree apud Brusolam, in 976. The town was not fortified until about 1044, when Lambert Balderic, Count of Louvain and Brussels, built a wall, with seven gates, around it. It had grown to be a thriving and populous city, tenacious of its privileges, when Brabant passed, in 1430, into the possession of the dukes of Burgundy. Under the rule of the house of Hapsburg it became early in the sixteenth century the usual seat of government for the entire Low Countries. It played an important part in the first stages of the revolt against Spain, and was terribly chastised by Alva. It was in the possession of the French from 1794 until 1814 as capital of the department of the Dyle. In 1831 it became the capital of the kingdom of Belgium. Pop. in 1800, 76,425; in 1876, 183,690; in 1892, 183,833, or with faubourgs, 487,988; in 1901, exclusive of the faubourgs, 211,429.

Bucharest, or Bukharest, búk-a-rést' (Ruman, Bucuresci,—i.e., "the city of enjoyment"), a city of south-eastern Europe, capital of Rumania, formerly of Wallachia, situated in a swampy plain on both sides of the Dimbovitza. Lat. 44° 25' N.; lon. 26° 5' E. The river is spanned by about a dozen bridges, substantially built of iron or stone, and is bordered on either side by shaded promenades. Until recently Bucharest resembled a vast overgrown village, but the old semi-oriental quarters, with their low dwellings and primitive streets, are gradually disappearing. The numerous gardens and the bright cupolas of its many Greek churches give to the city a rather picturesque appearance. The principal thoroughfares are the so-called Boulevards and Victoria, Leipzig, and Charles streets. There are many stately edifices, as the royal palace, the various government buildings, the university, a number of churches, the national theatre, the banks, and the buildings devoted to military purposes. Bucharest is styled by the Rumanians "The Paris of the East," an appellation especially apt in a sinister sense. The city possesses a university with upward of 2000 students, of whom about eight per cent. are women. The manufactures are still restricted to a narrow range, most articles other than those of simple workmanship being imported from abroad. The trade of the place is very considerable, much of it being in the hands of Germans and Jews. Bucharest has recently been surrounded by a line of fortifications on a vast scale, a great feature of which are the revolving turrets. The works when completed will embrace a polygonal inner wall in addition to the circle of outer forts.

The climate is very variable. The city is exposed to violent winds and subject to drought. The mercury occasionally rises to above 100°, and sometimes descends below zero. There are a number of attractive resorts in the vicinity. The population in 1899 was 232,071. There were about 200,000 Orthodox Greeks, 43,000 Jews, and 37,000 Catholics and Protestants. A treaty was concluded at Bucharest between Russia and Turkey in 1812, by which the frontiers of Russia were advanced to the river Pruth.

Bu'dapest' (Hun. pron. boo'döb-pésh'), the capital of Hungary and seat of the National Diet, and next to Vienna the largest city of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy, charmingly situated on the Danube, 130 miles direct (173 by rail) SE. of Vienna. As its name implies, it consists of the two cities of Pest (Pesth) and Buda (Ger. Ofen), located respectively on the left and the right bank of the river, and which were united in 1873, together with Ó-Buda (Alt-Ofen, or Old Buda) and Kőbánya (Steinbruck), under the official title of Budapest. Lat. 47° 29' N.; lon. 19° 4' E. Of the two sections of the municipality, Buda is much the older. It stands on the slope of a hill, immediately N. of the dolomitic hill known as the Budaörs (394 feet above the river) and at the E. foot of the Schwabenberg (1463 feet above the sea), and is built in the form of an amphitheatre, having in its centre the fortress enclosing the royal palace (recently reconstructed and containing 860 rooms), the Matthias church, restored in 1890-96, the national educational museum, teachers' seminary, etc. Buda is now connected by 5 bridges with Pest, two of which are suspension bridges, the earliest being that constructed by Clark in 1840-49, 1230 feet in length. In contrast with Buda, Pest is essentially a modern town, the growth principally of the nineteenth century, and to-day it takes rank as one of the finest and most imposing cities of the continent, being intersected and surrounded by broad and architecturally elegant boulevards (Inner Ringstrasse, Outer Ringstrasse), and having a number of fine squares or plazas. The Franz-Josef Quai, which skirts the Danube for about 1 mile, and from which vehicles are excluded, is the fashionable recreation promenade of the city, while the Andrásy-Út (street), leading out to the very attractive city park (Városliget or Stadtwäldchen), is the equally fashionable driveway. Under the Andrásy-Út extends an electric railroad, whose beautifully constructed subway well reflects the progressive spirit of the citizens. Among the more important buildings and institutions of the city are the academy, containing the national picture-gallery, formerly known as the Esterházy Gallery, and a library of 200,000 volumes; the art-industrial museum, old house of representatives, Leopoldstadt basilica, the Neue Künstlerhaus (built in 1894), the opera-house, a superb Italian renaissance building, erected in 1875-84, the Kurie (seat of the supreme court), and the lavishly decorated new parliament house, a vast architectural pile, built immediately on the Danube front, covering 3½ acres, and surmounted by a central dome 350 feet in height.

Budapest is well endowed with educational and scientific institutions. The national university, removed hither from Tyrnau in 1780, is one of the most thoroughly organized in Europe, and in 1904 was attended by upward of 6278 students. The Joseph polytechnic institute has also a large faculty. The national museum has extensive collections in art and science, and a library of nearly 450,000 volumes. Budapest still retains many characteristics that pertain to the Orient, and its life is often described as being a gay union of that of the East and of the West. No city of Europe, excepting, perhaps, Paris, surpasses it in the intensity of search after pleasure, and none more thoroughly reflects the national life of a country.

In the Danube, opposite the upper end of the city, is the Margarethen-Insel (island), with baths and a delightful park, a much-frequented recreation spot for all classes. Numerous thermal, chalybeate, and sulphurous springs are found on the Buda side of the city, and have been adapted to baths. Of these perhaps the best known is the Kaiserbad, with a temperature of the ten or more springs ranging from 80° to 150°. The principal industries of the city are those pertaining to the produce of the country,—the milling of the celebrated Hungarian flour, tobacco manufactures, sugar-refining, etc. Budapest is the outlet of the extensive grain trade of the country. The vineyards of Buda yield a noted wine.

A Roman colony existed on the site now occupied by Old Buda (Alt-Ofen) under the name of Aquincum (Aquincum), remains of which are still visible. A flourishing colony of Germans grew up here in the Middle Ages on both sides of the Danube. The name Pest came to be restricted to the town on the E. bank, while the town on the opposite bank became known by the German name of Ofen, corresponding to the Hungarian name Pest, an appellation derived from a Slavic word and having, presumably, reference to a sun-baked location or the presence of hot springs, or else, what is considered more probable, to the existence of lime-kilns or something of the sort. The Hungarians applied the name Buda to Ofen. Buda was favored by the Hungarian monarchs, and finally became the virtual capital of the kingdom. From 1641-1686 it was in the hands of the Turks, and was the seat of a Turkish pasha. For some time after the expulsion of the Turks, Pest remained an insignificant town, but gradually outstripped Buda in the course of the eighteenth century. In 1840 the combined population of the two cities was about 100,000. Pest was the seat of the national Hungarian government in the first part of the revolutionary struggle of 1848-49. In 1867, as capital of the Hungarian kingdom in the reconstructed Austro-Hungarian Monarchy, it became one of the great political centres of Europe. Since 1873, Pest and Buda have formed one city. The population of Budapest in 1890 was 360,551, of whom about one-fifth resided in Buda. In 1890 it had risen to 492,237, and in 1900 it amounted to 713,383. The bulk of the population are Roman Catholics; about one-fifth are Jews. About one-fourth of the people speak German.

Buenos Aires, bwi'noos i'ras, formerly written Buenos Ayres (i.e., "good air"), the largest and most important city of South America, a federal district and capital of the Argentine Republic, is situated on the west side of the Plata estuary, here 30 miles wide, and about 150 miles from the sea. Lat. 34° 36' 21" S.; lon. 58° 21' 33" W. It is the objective point and terminus of several railways, and stands on a perfectly level plain. It is regularly laid out, all its streets crossing one another at right angles. The houses are in the main still of a single story, enclosing a central court, but in the business portions of the city, and in the newer residence-quarters near them, substantial architectural structures have been erected, and there are numerous palatial mansions designed after Parisian, Italian, Spanish, Moorish, and Norwegian patterns. None of the older South American cities has so completely lost its national characteristics as Buenos Aires. The principal square is the Plaza de la Victoria, on which are the government buildings (Palacio de Gobierno), the cabildo or hall of justice, the cathedral (resembling the Madeleine of Paris), and the archbishop's palace. Other important buildings and institutions of the city are the opera-house, several theatres, and the sumptuous terminal depot of the Great Southern railway. Modern boulevards are replacing many of the old and narrow streets, and among them the Avenida de Mayo is the finest. Buenos Aires has numerous educational and scientific institutions of a high order, among which are the university (with extensive faculties and about 2700 students), a national library, museum of natural history (with most important paleontological collections), zoological garden, and observatory. The city is provided with an elaborate system of water-works, the supply of water being obtained from a distance of several miles. Its tramway connections and ramifications are markedly in advance, and minister to the needs of the surrounding rural communities. Palermo Park and the Recoleta furnish the fashionable and recreation concourses.

The trade, and consequently the prosperity, of Buenos Aires have until recently been much impeded by the difficulty of navigating the Plata and the want of a safe and commodious harbor, which have compelled large vessels to remain several miles below the city. The establishment of a city-port and port of entry at Ensenada, on the Bay of Ensenada, about 27 miles distant, and the utilization of the Riachuelo Channel in connection with the construction of vast harbor-works and docks, channel excavations, etc., have materially lessened the difficulties of shipment and unloading and added to the commercial development of the city. The new Madero docks, begun in 1887, have a city frontage of 3 miles. The climate of Buenos Aires is moist and variable, but regarded as healthy, though severe epidemics of yellow fever sometimes occur and rheumatic affections are very prevalent. The mean temperature of the year is about 63°; of July, approximately the coldest month, 50°; and of January, 75°. The yearly rainfall is 34 inches. Buenos Aires is the commercial metropolis of the republic. It exports large quantities of hides, horns, bone-ash, bones, beef, tallow, hair, and other cattle products, ostrich feathers, wool, live-stock, etc. Its manufactures, which were wholly wanting a quarter of a century ago, are acquiring some importance. The environs of the city are very beautiful, consisting of well-cultivated fields, and enlivened by numerous country residences called quintas; the most wealthy have their country-seats surrounded with gardens. The foreign contingent is largely located in the suburbs of Belgrano, Flores, and Temperley. Buenos Aires was founded by the Spaniards in 1535. Pop. in 1869, 177,787; in 1886, 398,498; in 1900 (close of the year), 821,291. Area of the federal district, 72 sq. m.

Buenos Aires, the most populous and most flourishing of the provinces of the Argentine Republic, extends from the mouth of the Rio Negro, lat. 41° S., to near Rosario, on the Paraná River, and from the Atlantic border on the E. to about lon. 65° 30' W. Area, about 126,000 sq. m. Pop. in 1898, 921,168; calculated for the close of 1900, 1,140,067. The N. part includes a portion of the eastern Pampas, and is flat, with lakes and swamps. The S. part comprehends the low hills of the Sierras del Vulcan and Ventana. The principal river is the Salado. The climate is humid and variable, but intensely hot in summer. Occasionally there are years of excessive drought, and hurricane winds (pamperos) are not infrequent. The soil is exceedingly fertile in many parts, but the greater portion of the region still lacks cultivation and has been given over to the raising of live-stock (sheep, cattle, etc.). Hides, hair, horns, phosphates, wool, bones, beef-extract, ostrich feathers, tallow, and jerked beef are the chief exports; horses, mules, and asses are also exported. The cultivation of the cereals has latterly been materially extended, and wheat and corn are now exported. Capital (since 1882), La Plata.

Buffalo, a banking city, capital of Dallas co., Mo., 35 miles N. by E. of Springfield. Pop. in 1900, 757.

Buffalo, a city, port of entry, and seat of justice of Erie co., N.Y., is situated at the eastern extremity of Lake Erie, in lat. 42° 53' N., lon. 78° 55' W., 352 miles W. of Albany by the Erie Canal and 300 miles by the New York Central and Hudson River R. Other railroads centering here are the Pennsylvania, the Erie, the Lackawanna, the West Shore, the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern, the Lehigh Valley, the Grand Trunk, etc.

The city has a wharf-frontage of over 7 miles, and extends along the Niagara River, which is crossed here by the International Bridge, completed in 1873 at a cost of about $1,500,000. The site on the lake-front gradually rises, and at the distance of about 2 miles becomes an extended undulating plain 50 feet above the water-level of the harbor. The more elevated portion of the site affords fine views of the city, the Niagara River, the Canada shore, the lake and bay, and the hilly country to the SE. Buffalo, especially the west side residence portion, is handsomely built. Among its more noteworthy thoroughfares are Main Street, Delaware Avenue, Front Avenue, Niagara Street, Broadway, and the Humboldt Parkway. Most of the important streets are traversed by electric trams, which are operated by power generated by the Niagara Falls. A belt railroad makes the circuit of the city. At the point where the waters of the lake merge in the Niagara River, Buffalo Creek enters the lake from the E. and the Erie Canal from the NW., being nearly parallel in their passage through the city and harbor. The streets in the more elevated portions of the city are bordered with a profusion of shade-trees, and there are numerous elegant residences and imposing mercantile and office structures. The Elliott Square building is one of the largest office-buildings in the world, and accommodates a community numbering 4000-5000.

Favorably located for business, and with many advantages as a place of residence, Buffalo shows a ratio of increase in population far above the average of that of cities in the eastern and older portion of the United States, taking rank as the eleventh in population in the census of 1890, and eighth in the census of 1900. The city claims to be the cleanest, best-lighted, and healthiest city in the United States, with the best water and the best and most complete sewerage; it has an ample water-supply, obtained from the Niagara through a tunnel extending nearly to the middle of the river. Among the more noteworthy buildings and institutions of Buffalo are the government building, city-hall (with a tower 200 feet high), the public library, with over 200,000 volumes (the building also containing the rooms and collections of the Fine Arts Academy, the Buffalo Historical Society, and the Buffalo Society of Natural Sciences), the university, comprising departments of medicine, law, dentistry, and pharmacy, the Grosvenor library, and the state insane asylum. The city is well provided with charitable and ecclesiastical institutions, and among the churches may be mentioned the Gothic St. Paul's church, Trinity church, and the synagogue. The Erie county almshouse is located here. The city has, in addition to other parks, a magnificent public park of 442 acres, and there is a tastefully laid-out cemetery of 75 acres, called the Forest Lawn, in the suburbs. The outlying gigantic coal-elevators are a feature of the city.

Buffalo is an important and prosperous centre of trade, and has extensive manufactures. Its commerce has made prodigious strides during many years,—a fact due to its location at the outlet of the great chain of lakes, and to its being the terminus of the Erie Canal and of the various trunk railroad lines that converge here and give direct communication with many of the more important commercial foci of the country. Through its intermediate position and facilities for shipping Buffalo is made the emporium of a large portion of the trade between the East and the Northwest. Grain is the most important article of commerce, and the facilities for handling and storing it are unequalled by those of any other city on this continent; the growth of this branch of trade may be estimated by the fact that it was only in 1843 that Joseph Dart built the first grain-elevator here, and that the storing capacity of the elevators to-day is nearly 30,000,000 bushels, with facilities for transferring upward of 5,000,000 bushels per day. Buffalo is now the eastern distributing centre of western flour. In the live-stock trade Buffalo is second to Chicago only. The city has also a large trade in anthracite and bituminous coal, received from Pennsylvania and distributed both westward and eastward, and it is now the distributing point of nearly all of the west-bound anthracite coal, shipping yearly several million tons by lake alone. The lumber-trade is also very important, the annual receipts in shipment rising to 600,000,000-700,000,000 feet. In iron and steel manufacturing and working Buffalo ranks next to Pittsburgh. Among the other industries of the city are those of car-building, oil-refining, distilling and brewing, the manufacture of clothing, soap, starch, and leather, slaughtering, meat-packing, etc.

Buffalo, originally laid out by the Holland Company in 1803-04, became in 1812 a military post. It was burnt in Dec., 1813, when of the 200 houses composing the village all but two were destroyed by the British and Indians. In April, 1822, it was incorporated as a city, and in 1853 it annexed its former rival, Black Rock. Pop. in 1810, 1508; in 1820, 2995; in 1830, 8663; in 1840, 18,213; in 1850, 42,261; in 1860, 85,500; in 1870, 117,714; in 1880, 155,134; in 1890, 255,664; and in 1900, 352,387, an increase of nearly 40 per cent. in a decennium. The Pan-American Exposition was held in Buffalo in 1901.

Burgos (L. Bur'gi), a city of Spain, capital of the province of Burgos, in Old Castile, on the Arlanón and on the railway from Madrid to Bayonne, 130 miles N. of Madrid. It is situated in a fruitful region at an elevation of 2800 feet above the sea. Burgos has a stately appearance, with many characteristics of an old Castilian city; it is built in an irregular semicircle, portions of its old walls remaining on the side of the river, which is here crossed by three fine stone bridges. Of its fine promenades, the one most frequented is the Espolón. Burgos was the early capital of the rulers of Castile, and afterwards it long shared with Toledo the honor of being the royal residence. Its public buildings attest its former greatness. The most remarkable structure is the cathedral, one of the finest Gothic buildings of Europe. It was commenced in 1231, but was not finished for several centuries. Burgos, with its immediate outskirts, possesses numerous other beautiful and interesting ecclesiastical edifices. The Plaza Mayor, the principal of the many public squares, is surrounded by arcades. There is a triumphal arch in memory of Ferdinand Gonzales, and one of the city gates is crowned by a statue of the Cid, whose bones lie in the old town-hall. On an eminence stands the citadel, now in a ruined state and supplanted by modern fortifications. Burgos is an archbishop's see. It has manufactures of woollens and hats. Its trade and its fairs have greatly declined. The Peninsular War, during which the possession of the town was repeatedly and keenly contested, was very disastrous to it, but of late years it has increased in population. The climate of Burgos is for most of the year nearly the coldest in Spain, and the summer heat is intense. Pop. in 1897, 30,856; in 1900, 31,413.

Bur'gundy (Fr. Bourgogne, boor'goñ'; L. Burgun'dia; Ger. Burgund, böör-göör't), one of the largest and most important of the former provinces of France, now forming the departments of Côte-d'Or, Saône-et-Loire, Yonne, part of Ain, and part of Aube. It is a region beautifully diversified by hill and valley, and included in the basins of the Rhone, Seine, and Loire. The wines of Burgundy are famous. Among the towns of Burgundy are Dijon, Mâcon, Autun, Auxerre, Chalon-sur-Saône, and Beaune. Its ancient inhabitants were the Ædii. The name of Burgundy is derived from that of a Germanic nation, called, in Latin, Burgundi or Burgundiones, who in the fifth century established a kingdom, which embraced a great part of the basin of the Rhône. Within a hundred years the Burgundians were conquered by the Franks. On the disruption of the Carolingian realm, towards the close of the ninth century, two Burgundian realms arose, the kingdoms of Cisjurane Burgundy (or of Provence) and Transjurane Burgundy, which were soon united into the kingdom of Arles. The ancient line of dukes of Burgundy became extinct in 1361. Under the succeeding line of dukes of the house of Valois, Burgundy rose to be one of the most powerful states of Europe, the various rich states of the Netherlands being united under its sway. The male line having become extinct in 1477, on the death of Charles the Bold, his son-in-law, Louis XI., seized the dukedom, which has since formed part of France. The old county of Burgundy was known by the name of FRANCIA-CONRÆ.

It communicates with the Mediterranean by a single channel, known in antiquity as the Sebennytic mouth of the Nile, and is connected with the Nile by several canals.

Burma (derived from Mran-ma, generally pronounced byām-mā, the native name of the Burmese), a country of southeastern Asia, formerly a kingdom, known also as the kingdom of Ava, now a province of the British Indian Empire. It is bounded N. by Tibet, E. by the Chinese provinces of Yun-nan, French Indo-China, and Siam, SW. by the Bay of Bengal, and W. by Bengal, Manipur, and Assam. It extends from about lat. 10° to 28° 15' N., and between lon. 92° and 104° 40' E. Its northern extremity is not far from the E. end of the Himalaya Mountains, and it stretches S., finally as a narrow strip, along the Bay of Bengal (which indents the coast in the Bay of Martaban) into the Malay Peninsula, covering a distance of about 1250 miles. It comprises Upper Burma, the northern half, and Lower Burma, to the S. and W. of the former. Lower Burma consists of Arakan (a once-famous and powerful realm) and Tenasserim, respectively in the NW. and SE., both acquired by the British in 1826, and of Pegu (a mediæval realm), lying between the other two, which has been a British possession since 1852. These names designate 3 of the 4 divisions of Lower Burma, one portion having been set off as the division of Irawadi. Upper Burma (the kingdom of Burma) was conquered by the British in 1885. The area of the whole province is, in round numbers, about 175,000 sq. m., and there is an additional area of about 70,000 sq. m. included in its dependencies, known as the Shan States. Pop. in 1901, exclusive of dependencies, 9,221,000; of the dependent states, about 1,250,000.

Burma is traversed from N. to S. by the Irawadi, and comprises most of the basin of that mighty river, which forms a vast delta in the Pegu and Irawadi divisions. Its principal affluent is the Kyendwin (Chindwin), from the W. The Irawadi is navigable for steamboats as far as Bhamo, about 900 miles from its mouth. It periodically lays a large strip of country under water. The eastern part of Burma is drained by the Salwin, flowing parallel with the Irawadi and exceeding it in length, but barely navigable. Between the Irawadi and the Salwin is the valley of the Sittang. The chief river of Arakan is the Kaladan. The Mekong waters the eastern borders of Burma for a comparatively short distance.

The greater part of the surface of Burma is mountainous or hilly. The general direction of the mountains, like that of the rivers, is N. and S. To the W. of the Irawadi is the range known as the Arakan-Yoma, with an extreme elevation of 8400 feet; between the Irawadi and the Sittang is the Pegu-Yoma; and between the Salwin and the Sittang is the Paung-laung (Pung-lung) range. On the NW. borders are the Patkoi Hills, rising to 12,990 feet, and with a northern outlying summit having an elevation of about 18,000 feet. A large portion of the country is covered with forests. The climate in the lowlands is as trying to Europeans as that of the plains of India. The rainfall in the coast-region ranges from about 100 to 200 inches. In the region of the upper Irawadi it is about equal to that in the eastern United States. The soil is very productive, the great crop of the country being rice, which is produced in endless variety. Wheat, maize, millet, and pulse are raised in the elevated regions. Tea is an important crop. Among other products are cotton, indigo, sugar-cane, sesame, and tobacco. The forests abound in teak and other trees, valuable for their wood or gum. Their almost impenetrable depths shelter vast numbers of wild animals, including tigers, leopards, bears, elephants, rhinoceroses, deer, hogs, tapirs, buffaloes, and a great variety of apes. There are countless species of birds, reptiles, and fishes. Burma is rich in minerals. Iron, copper, lead, and tin abound, and gold and silver are found in the river sands of Upper Burma. There are extensive deposits of coal in Upper Burma, and petroleum is obtained in large quantities, there being over 100 wells in one locality in that section, on the Irawadi, about lat. 26° 38' N. Burma is famed for its rubies and sapphires. Jade, marble, serpentine, and amber are also found abundantly.

Burma is inhabited mainly by four peoples of the Indo-Chinese race: the Burmese proper, comprising about half of the population and dwelling mainly in the lower basin of the Irawadi; the Arakanese (Rakhing), or inhabitants of Arakan; the Karens, inhabiting chiefly the forest-regions of Lower Burma, large numbers of whom have been converted to Christianity; and the Shans, a migratory people, occupying an elevated region about the Salwin and Mekong, between the parallel of 20° and the Tropic of Cancer, and inhabiting also French, Chinese, and Siamese territory, who live under their own chiefs. In addition to these nationalities, there are the Talings (or Mon), in Lower Burma, the Palaungs, Chins, Lushais, and others. About nine-tenths of the total population of Burma are Buddhists. The remainder are pretty nearly evenly divided between Mohammedans, Hindus, spirit-worshippers, and Christians. The Burmese are a short, well-built, thick-set race, with black hair and little beard and yellow-brown skin. The poorer classes dwell in houses of bamboo and palm-houses. The houses of the wealthier class are often profusely gilded. The Burmese are proficient in the making of lacquer-ware, metal-working, wood-carving, and silk-weaving. Their chief subsistence is rice. The Burmese language is essentially monosyllabic, allied to Chinese and Tibetan, and is written in rounded characters. Only about half of the people are unable to read. Instruction is in the hands of the Buddhist priests, who live in monasteries. The Burmese have an extensive literature, reaching back many centuries, and numerous books are annually published in their language. The government of the old Burmese realm, which was extinguished by the British in 1885, was a pure despotism. There was no nobility, but the division into social classes was carried to fantastic lengths. The Shans are a stronger and braver race than the Burmese. The exports from Burma include rice (of which larger quantities are shipped than from any other country in the world), teak, catch (gambier), hides, petroleum, rubies, sapphires, jade, amber, lac, ivory, rhinoceros and deer-horns, and caoutchouc. The foreign trade is mainly in the hands of the English and Chinese, and the bulk of it passes through the port of Rangoon, near the mouth of the Irawadi. An active trade with the Chinese province of Yun-nan is carried on through Bhamo. Economic development has progressed rapidly under English rule, and has been accompanied by a vast increase of population. There are more than 1000 miles of railway in the country. Burma is administered by a lieutenant-governor, under the viceroy of India. The seat of government is Rangoon, the largest city, with a population in 1901 of 232,000. The next largest city is Mandalay, the last capital of the kingdom of Burma, founded not many years before the extinction of that realm close to the former capital, Amarapura, which is now in ruins. Among other considerable or noteworthy towns are Maulmein, Akyab, Bassein, Prome, Pegu, and Tavoy, all in Lower Burma; Ava, previous to 1783 the capital of the kingdom of Ava, or of Burma, a few miles from Mandalay; and Pagan, the capital of the mediæval realm of Pagan, about 90 miles SW. of Mandalay.

Cadiz, ká'dis (Sp. pron. ká'deeth; Fr. Cádiz, ká'dees'; anc. Ga'des), a city and seaport of Spain, capital of a province of its own name, on the Isle of León, off the SW. coast of Andalusia, 60 miles NW. of Gibraltar and 64 miles S. by W. of Seville. Lat. 36° 32' N.; lon. 6° 17' W. The Isle of León is separated from the mainland by a very narrow and tortuous channel. The town stands on a narrow tongue of land, which projects about 5 miles NNW. into the sea; it is almost completely surrounded by water, and is strongly defended both by nature and by art. The city itself is surrounded by walls of great height and thickness, flanked with towers and bastions. Its capacious bay consists of an inner and an outer harbor. Cadiz, as viewed from the sea, presents a highly picturesque appearance, and the views from elevated points within the city are superb. Architecturally the place is comparatively modern, the conflagration of 1596 having consumed a great part of the old town. There are fine public squares and promenades. The houses are often surmounted by towers, open to the sea-breeze, which are called miradores, or "lookouts." Among the principal structures and institutions are the Torre de Vigia or Tavira, the watch-tower; old cathedral; the new cathedral, of marble; the academy of fine arts; archaeological museum; the church of Santa Catalina, containing one of Murillo's masterpieces; and the Hall of Fame for seamen. The lofty light-house of San Sebastián was demolished by the Spaniards at the time of the war with the United States. La Carraca, the royal dock-yard, is situated at the bottom of the inner bay, about 6 miles from the city. There is a large dry-dock at the Trocadero, opposite the city, at the entrance to the inner harbor. The trade of Cadiz is large, although but a shadow of what it was at the time when Spain was mistress of a great part of the New World. The chief article exported is sherry wine. Salt, olive oil, lead, ore, and fruits are also important articles of export. The climate of the city is warm and moist, and the summer heat is often intense.

Cadiz was founded by the Phœnicians, and early became a commercial town of great importance. It fell into the hands of the Carthaginians in the first Punic War; in the second Punic War it voluntarily surrendered to the Romans. Its inhabitants received the Roman franchise from Julius Cæsar. It was taken in 1596 by the Earl of Essex. In 1823 it surrendered to the French. Pop. in 1900, 69,382.—Adj. and inhab. GADITÁ'NIAN (Sp. GADITANO, gá-de-tá'no).

Cæn, kân (L. Cado'mus or Cado'mum), a city of France, capital of the department of Calvados (Normandy), 125 miles (direct) WNW. of Paris, at the confluence of the Orne with the Odon, 10 miles from the English Channel. Lat. 49° 11' N.; lon. 0° 24' W. Cæn, with its imposing churches and other stately edifices, its fine promenades, its public squares and sculptural monuments, and its wealth of educational institutions, is one of the most impressive of the smaller cities of western Europe. The houses are generally built of an excellent freestone which is extensively quarried in the vicinity and exported to foreign countries. Many of the buildings are admirable specimens of the Norman style of architecture. Among the many churches are the cathedral of St. Étienne, or Abbaye aux Hommes, containing the tomb of William the Conqueror, who founded it in 1066; the church of the Trinity, or the Abbaye aux Dames, in the Romanesque style, founded by Matilda, wife of William the Conqueror; and the church of St. Pierre. Among the secular structures are the building of the prefecture, in the Italian style, the old edifice of the Palais de Justice, the Hôtel de Ville, on the Place de la République, the exchange, the Lyceum, and the new university buildings. The castle built by William the Conqueror is still partially preserved. The University of Cæn is the successor of the university founded by Henry VI. of England. The town has a municipal library of 100,000 volumes, a splendid gallery of paintings, a museum of natural history, and a botanical garden. It has manufactures of lace, linen, cotton goods, gloves, hosiery, etc.; some ship-building is also carried on. The raising of fruits and flowers is an important industry. The trade of the town is extensive, and is facilitated by a commodious basin and a ship-canal.

Cæn rose into importance under William the Conqueror and became the capital of Lower Normandy. In 1346 it was taken and pillaged by Edward III. of England. It was again taken by the English in 1417, and wrested from them in 1450 by Dunois. Pop. of the commune in 1901, 44,794; of the town, 38,072.

Cairo, kí'ro (Arab. Ma'at el-Káhira, má's' el ká'he-rá, —i.e., "the victorious capital"), the capital of Egypt, on the right bank of the Nile, 5 miles from the commencement of its delta. Lat. of the observatory, 30° 4' 38" N.; lon. 31° 17' 14" E. Pop. in 1897, 570,000, of whom the resident Europeans were about 23,000 and the Jews 7000. Climate healthy; the heat is great in summer, the temperature moderate in winter. Mean temperature of the year, 73°; of winter, 58°; of summer, 85° Fahr. It never snows and very seldom rains, but dew is abundant. The city proper is built on a slope at the western foot of one of the lowest ridges of the chain of Jebel Mokattam. Cairo is the most populous city of Egypt. It is the chief centre of Mohammedan learning, and in architecture and general appearance, in the life of its streets, and in the varied types of its inhabitants, is one of the most characteristic of Oriental cities. The newer portions are chiefly built in European style, with wide streets and boulevards, electric tramways, and elegant hotels. Separating the old or true Arabian Cairo from the new and fashionable foreign quarter of Ismailiya, which now extends westward completely to the Nile, is the Esbekieh Garden, which was laid out in 1870, and adjoining which is the Place de l'Opéra, with the modern opera-house. Other important buildings are located in this quarter, to which conducts the Muski, the chief thoroughfare of the city. The old parts of the town have narrow and crooked streets and are ill kept and badly paved, but there are hundreds of beautiful mosques and many old residences of great elegance. Cairo is still in part surrounded by old walls, and many of the outer and inner gates are preserved. The highest part of the over-looking ridge is occupied by a citadel, which contains the arsenal, mint, public offices, khedivial palace, and the magnificent alabaster mosque of Mehmet Ali, completed in 1857. The citadel is commanded by forts placed on the extremity of the chain of Mokattam.

Among the more notable institutions and structures of Cairo are the Mohammedan University, founded in 908, and attended in 1903 by over 9000 students,—the largest institution of learning in the land of Islam; the famous Museum of Egyptian Antiquities, originally at Bulak and recently at Ghiseh; the vice-regal library, containing about 40,000 volumes; the Arabian Museum, and the numerous mosques, of which the Gami's Sultan Hassan, the "superb mosque," with its massive gateway and superb minarets (one of which is 230 feet in height), is considered to be the finest piece of Byzantine-Arabian architecture extant. The commerce of Cairo is large, the town being the great entrepôt of the central African trade by way of the Nile and the railways, several lines of which connect it with all the important points in the delta region, with Upper Egypt, and with the Sudan. A number of bridges cross the Nile at this point, the most notable of which is the Great Nile bridge, 1260 feet in length. The surroundings of Cairo have many points of interest, such as the tombs of the Mamelukes, the obelisk of Heliopolis, the pyramids of Ghiseh, the petrified forest, the Nile barrage, and Bulak, the port of the city, in the NW.

The present city was founded by the Arabs, in 973, near the site of Fostat or Old Cairo, the original Arab capital. Its citadel was built by Saladin in 1176. It was the capital of the sultans of Egypt till the time of the Turkish conquest in 1517, after which it was the residence of the pashas, governors of the province. It was taken by the French in 1798, and held by them for 2½ years.

Cairo, a city and port of delivery of Illinois, the capital of Alexander co., is situated at the southern extremity of the state, on a low point of land at the confluence of the Mississippi and Ohio rivers, about 180 miles below St. Louis and 365 miles SSW. of Chicago. It is on the Illinois Central and other railroads, and has considerable steamboat traffic. The railroads N. and S. of the Ohio River are connected with the city by a steel bridge, erected in 1868 at a cost of nearly $3,900,000. The site of Cairo was subject to inundations, which retarded its growth, until it was protected by a levee built at great expense. It has important manufacturing interests and is a shipping point for grain, oil, etc. During the Civil War Cairo was a depot for supplies and an important military point. A United States marine hospital is located here. Pop. in 1890, 10,324; in 1900, 12,566.

Calcutta, a city, capital of British India and of the presidency of Bengal, is situated on the E. bank of the river Hugli, 80 miles from the sea, in lat. 22° 34' N., lon. 88° 25' E. On the opposite side of the river is the large municipality of Howrah. Calcutta covers an area of about 15 sq. m., and is the terminus of several railways and numerous canals. It is the seat of an immense trade by sea and river, being the natural outlet for the great valleys of the Ganges and Brahmaputra. Until recently it was the greatest commercial emporium of India, a position now assumed by Bombay. Calcutta has excellent anchorage, and the deep water permits vessels of 25 feet draft or more to enter at all times. The port is provided with both dry- and wet-docks. There are numerous jetties and warehouses, excellent systems of drainage and water-supply (which have changed the city from one of the sickliest to one of the healthiest places in Asia), a university (founded in 1857), several government and mission colleges (Bishop's College), schools of art, medicine, and engineering, a mint, the Indian Museum, a botanical garden, a noble government house, cathedral, etc. Some of these buildings or institutions are located in Howrah. Calcutta is the seat of the Bengal branch of the Asiatic Society and of other important scientific and literary associations. The town is lighted by gas and, in part, by electricity, and there are many miles of tramway. The site of old Fort William is the centre of the commercial activity of the city, and here are located most of the government offices. The European quarter, which is situated E. of the maiden, or great park, with its Maiden Esplanade and the Strand, has an entirely Occidental aspect, and the Chowringhee, or aristocratic section, has given to Calcutta the name of "City of Palaces." The native portion, or Black Town, is in general built of slight materials, but the streets are in great part broad and straight, and contain many palatial and princely edifices and residences of wealthy merchants. The chief imports of Calcutta are cotton goods, linens, silks, hardware, pig-metals, silver (coined and in ingots), wines, spirits, and salt. The exports are far greater than the imports, and consist of jute, opium, indigo, rice, cotton, tea, sugar, coffee, hides, raw silk, saltpetre, matting, gunny-bags, etc. There is also a large local and native trade. The city is the seat of active manufactures, chiefly carried on in households by natives, and has sugar-refineries, cotton-mills, etc. Calcutta dates its history from about the year 1686, when a factory was established on its present site. Ten years later Fort William was erected. The town became the general seat of government of British India in 1773. Mean temperature of the year, 78°; of May, 85°; of January, 65°. Calhoun, a post-village of Columbia co., Ark., about 35 miles SW. of Camden.

Calhoun, a banking post-town, capital of Gordon co., Ga., on the Western and Atlantic R., 20 miles S. of Dalton. Pop. in 1900, 851.

Calhoun, or Fairview, a post-village of Richland co., Ill., about 7 miles S. by E. of Otney. Pop. about 60.

Calhoun, a banking post-town, capital of McLean co., Ky., on the Green River, opposite Rumsey, about 65 miles NW. of Bowling Green. The river is navigable at all seasons. Pop. in 1900, 631.

Calhoun, a post-village of Ouachita parish, La., 14 miles by rail W. of Monroe.

Calhoun, a post-village of Madison co., Miss., on the Illinois Central R., 7 miles S. of Canton.

Calhoun, a banking city of Henry co., Mo., on the Missouri, Kansas and Texas R., 11 miles NE. of Clinton. Pop. in 1900, 561.

Calhoun, a banking post-village of Washington co., Neb., on the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Omaha R., 20 miles N. by W. of Omaha. Pop. in 1900, 346.

Calhoun, a post-village of Transylvania co., N.C.

Calhoun, a town of Pickens co., S.C., in Central township. Pop. in 1900, 299.

Calhoun, a post-village of McMinn co., Tenn., on the Southern R., 42 miles ENE. of Chattanooga.

Calí, kā-lee', a town of Colombia, department of Cauca, 70 miles N. by E. of Popayán. Lat. 3° 25' N.; lon. 76° 30' W. It lies on the eastern declivity of the Western Cordillera, in the valley of the Cauca, and is connected by rail with the Pacific port of Buenaventura. It is an important commercial town, the inhabitants of which are engaged in the transit trade from the interior to the Pacific. Pop. about 16,000.

Calibo, kā-lē-so, a pueblo of Capiz province, Panay, Philippine Islands, near the mouth of the Adán River, on the N. coast. It produces rice, maize, tobacco, and cacao, fabrics of cotton and abaca, and gold, and has important fisheries.

Callico, a post-village of Pitt co., N.C. Pop. 100.

Callicoreck, a banking post-village of Isard co., Ark.

Calicut, corrupted from Kelikkodu, a town of Madras, British India, on the Malabar coast, 560 miles SSE. of Bombay. Lat.  $11^{\circ} 15' N.$ ; lon.  $75^{\circ} 52' E.$  It was at this place that Vasco da Gama reached India in 1498. Under Portuguese rule the town sank from the position of a great emporium of trade until it had ceased to be important by the time the English occupied it in 1792. In recent times it has again become a flourishing seat of commerce and is now connected by rail with Madras. It has a large trade with Arabia and Persia, although its anchorage is but an open roadstead. Pop. in 1901, 75,510, chiefly Mohammedans, of partial Arabian stock. It ships cocoa oil, coir, betel, pepper, ginger, teak, saffron, sandal-wood, cardamoms, and wax. The cotton stuffs originally exported from Calicut became known as "calico."

Callicien'te, a post-station of Kern co., Cal., on the Southern Pacific R., 253 miles SSE. of Stockton.

Cal'ifom', a post-village of Hunterdon co., N.J., on the Central R. of New Jersey, 5 miles NNE. of Highbridge, its banking point. Pop. about 500.

California, kah-le-for'-na, a state of the American Union, bordering on the Pacific, is bounded N. by Oregon, E. by Nevada and Arizona, S. by Mexico (Lower California), and W. by the Pacific Ocean, its S. and N. limits being the parallels  $32^{\circ} 28'$  and  $42^{\circ} N.$  lat. The Colorado River washes the southernmost portion of its E. boundary, dividing it from Arizona. Area, inclusive of the appertaining waters, 158,360 sq. m. Capital, Sacramento.

Surface, Coast-Line, and Waters.—A most conspicuous feature of California is its vast mountain-system. Along its eastern boundary extends the lofty Sierra Nevada, or Snowy Mountain range, averaging some 70 miles in breadth, and embracing among its peaks some of the highest points in the United States. Mount Whitney, E. by S. of Fresno, with an elevation of 14,998 feet, is assumed to be the highest summit of the national domain outside of Alaska. Along the coast extends the Coast Range, of considerably less elevation, which unites with the Sierra Nevada system on the S. in about lat.  $35^{\circ}$ , in the Tehachapi range, and on the N. in lat.  $41^{\circ} 30'$ , where the great volcanic cone of Shasta, 14,442 or 14,380 feet, is situated. By some geographers Lassen Peak, 10,437 feet, is considered to be the termination of the Sierra Nevada proper. Between these ranges lies the magnificent valley of the rivers Sacramento and San Joaquin, renowned for its beauty and fertility, and known as the Great Valley of California. It measures upward of 500 miles in length, with a width generally of 40-60 miles; probably a full third of this area lies not more than 100 feet above the sea. Included in the Sierra Nevada are the deep rift- or glacial-valleys, —Yosemite, King's, Tuolumne, —which have become world-famous for their magnificent scenery. A third range of mountains, the San Bernardino, with a NW. and SE. trend, occupies the southern part of the state, and in the San Bernardino Mountain attains an elevation of 11,600 feet. E. and NE. of this range lies the great depressed and arid region of the Mohave and Colorado Deserts, Death Valley, etc., a portion of which at one time formed the course of the Colorado River. At Salton the surface is 263 feet below sea-level, and contains large deposits of salt. The extreme N. of the state is an elevated mountain region, densely timbered, especially near the sea, with a broken surface, and with a much colder and more rainy climate than any other portion of the state possesses. The coast-line is nowhere deeply indented, except by the Monterey and San Francisco bays, the last-named affording magnificent harborage and a port of the first commercial importance. Other harbors are those of Humboldt Bay, San Pedro (prospective port of Los Angeles), and San Diego, and, of lesser importance, Crescent City, Bodega, Trinidad, San Luis, Morro, Santa Cruz, and Half Moon bays. San Pablo and Suisun bays form an eastern extension of the Bay of San Francisco, and through them the navigable rivers Sacramento and San Joaquin discharge their waters. Excepting these two rivers and some of their larger tributaries, there are very few streams in the state whose navigation is at all practicable. Of lacustrine waters may be mentioned Mono, Tahoe, Honey, Goose, Lower Klamath, and Tulare lakes, several of which have no outlet to the sea. Tulare Lake is now mostly dry.

Climate.—Extending for more than 700 miles from N. to S., California presents a very great variety of climatic conditions. The winter climate of the northern mountains is severe, and the rainfall of the NW., especially in winter, is very large. The climate of the section W. of the Coast Mountains, especially northward, is damp, foggy, and quite cold, even in summer, and more particularly at night. E. of these mountains the winter climate is very delightful, especially in the S. and in the great central valley; but in summer the greater part of California is parched and dried, so scanty is the rainfall and so extreme the heat. But the nights are almost everywhere cool, and the dryness of the air, with the constant prevalence of breezes, prevents the heat from becoming oppressive. Many parts of the southern region have a rainfall of less than 10 inches, and in the desert tracts there is practically no rain. The climate of California, as a whole, is one of the finest in the world. In the great central valley an extensive system of irrigation has been inaugurated, and has greatly extended the area of cultivable land, already large. In the S. water is very generally brought upon the cultivated lands by long ditches, and in some places artesian wells have been successfully employed. Large portions of the SE. are too hot and dry for successful agriculture. Excepting some malarial tracts on the rivers, California is exempt from endemic diseases. Southern California is resorted to by invalids as a sanitarium.

Mineral Resources.—The more distinctive episodes in the geological history of the state are reflected in the extensive lava-beds which occupy much of the NE., and the numerous well-preserved volcanic cones which give evidence of only recently abated volcanic energy; the Archæan axis of the Sierra Nevada, with Jurassic and Triassic beds on its flanks; the Cretaceous and Tertiary Coast Range and Pacific border strip; the Tertiary and Post-Tertiary Great Valley; and the ancient land of the NW. and elsewhere. California has not yet passed through its seismic periods,—earthquake disturbances, sometimes with severe effect, being not exceptional. The state contains numerous hot springs. The yield of precious metals since the discovery of gold in the state, in 1848, has been enormous. Gold occurs both in placer deposits and in quartz-reefs, the most productive locations being those of Jurassic age and of the comparatively recent auriferous gravels. The value of the gold-product in 1903 was $16,300,653. This slightly exceeds one-fourth of the average annual yield in the decade immediately following the discovery of the metal. Silver was mined in 1903 to the value of $498,412, and copper, the mining of which has declined, $2,533,355. Other important mined minerals are iron, antimony, borax, rock-salt, sulphur, and cinnabar, the mines of the last named (New Almaden, Idria) producing nearly the whole quicksilver product of the United States. Tin-ore exists at several points and there are also deposits of asphalt and petroleum. The output of oil in 1903 was 24,382,472 gallons. The Tertiary coal or lignite of the Monte Diablo range is of a high grade of excellence and has been extensively worked. The total output of the state's coal was, in 1899, 160,715 short tons. Natural gas is found in the San Joaquin and Sacramento valleys.

Natural History.—Both the flora and the fauna of the state are strongly characteristic. Among the trees may be enumerated the mammoth tree (Sequoia gigantea), a comparatively infrequent species, remarkable for the prodigious size of some of its specimens; the redwood of the NW. and the coast mountains (Sequoia sempervirens), a very valuable timber tree; numerous species of pine, fir, and cypress, some of which are also of gigantic dimensions, and the oak, walnut, plane, ash, maple, and many scarcely less important trees. There is, however, a deficiency of hardwood timber. Many fine flowering and evergreen shrubs are peculiar to this coast. A wild oat (Avena fatua), the introduced alfalfa or lucern, and pin-grass (Eloidium), a geraniaceous plant, are among the most important forage-plants of California. Among the larger animals are the grizzly bear, the puma, known as the California lion, the big-horn or mountain sheep, several species of deer, fox, and wolf, several seals, including the so-called sea-lion, etc. The coast-fishes are very numerous, and many of them are highly prized for food. In many of the northern streams the taking of salmon is an important industry. On some islands off the coast sea-birds' eggs are largely obtained as food. Insect pests are not wholly wanting, and in some parts grasshoppers have been very destructive at times.

Agriculture.—The soil of a large portion of California is deep, rich, and very profitably cultivated; and for many years past the state has been more famous for her vast fields of the best of wheat, her great wool-production, her fine fruits, and the products of her generous vineyards, than for the less valuable precious metals which she has produced in so lavish measure. Before the American occupation, hides and other cattle-products were the chief exports; and after it became a state, agriculture was neglected until the gradual failure of small mining operations became apparent. Sheep-farming early attracted attention, and the industry soon attained great dimensions, but it is not nearly as extensive now as formerly. The product of washed and unwashed wool in 1900 was 13,300,000 pounds. California, in 1900, ranked first among the states of the Union in the production of barley (14,856,170 bushels) and third in the production of wheat (23,543,628 bushels, valued at $16,555,304). The cultivation of grapes, of both native American and European varieties, is very largely carried on, and wine-making is an important industry, the product in favorable seasons realizing many million gallons of wine and brandy. The total amount of fruit-brandy produced in the fiscal year 1899-1900 was 3,061,363 gallons, and of fermented liquors, 753,582 barrels. Raisins, prunes, dried figs, and other dried fruits are extensively prepared in various parts of California. In the S. oranges, lemons, and other subtropical fruits are raised, while almonds, English walnuts, olives for oil and pickles, citrons, pomegranates, etc., are successfully grown. The production of oranges and lemons was, in the season of 1900-01, 7,150,000 boxes. The value of the canned and preserved-fruit products was, in 1900, $13,081,829. Tobacco, Indian corn, hops, peanuts, etc., are produced largely in various parts. Cotton has done well in several places. California ranks second among the states of the Union in the manufacture of beet-sugar. The value of the refined product of sugar and molasses was, in 1900, $15,909,998. Silk-culture has been tried with success. Tea- and coffee-raising has been experimentally tried, with favorable results. In the S. honey of excellent quality is very extensively produced. Ostrich-farming is carried on to some extent.

Manufactures and Commerce.—The manufacturing interests of California are of growing importance. Lumber and flour are important products. The shipments of red-wood lumber alone were, in 1900, 209,001,022 feet. Wine, brandy, cigars (55,000,000 cigars and 24,000,000 cigarettes manufactured during the year 1900), tobacco, iron and metallic wares, and machinery are among the leading manufactured articles. The fisheries are carried on chiefly from San Francisco, and considerable capital is invested. Most of the commerce of the state is carried on at San Francisco. There is a coasting trade to Puget Sound and Oregon, and a foreign trade to British Columbia, Panama, Liverpool, Australia, China, and Japan. With the Atlantic ports there is a trade via Cape Horn, as well as by the Panama route and by rail. There were, in 1900, 5601 miles of railway.

Counties.—California has 57 counties, viz., Alameda, Alpine, Amador, Butte, Calaveras, Colusa, Contra Costa, Del Norte, El Dorado, Fresno, Glenn, Humboldt, Inyo, Kern, Kings, Lake, Lassen, Los Angeles, Madera, Marin, Mariposa, Mendocino, Merced, Modoc, Mono, Monterey, Napa, Nevada, Orange, Placer, Plumas, Riverside, Sacramento, San Benito, San Bernardino, San Diego, San Francisco, San Joaquin, San Luis Obispo, San Mateo, Santa Barbara, Santa Clara, Santa Cruz, Shasta, Sierra, Siskiyou, Solano, Sonoma, Stanislaus, Sutter, Tehama, Trinity, Tulare, Tuolumne, Ventura, Yolo, and Yuba. The principal towns are San Francisco (pop. in 1900, 342,782), Los Angeles (102,479), Oakland (66,960), Sacramento (the capital, 29,282), San José (21,500), San Diego (17,700), Stockton (17,506), Alameda (16,464), Berkeley (13,214), Fresno (12,470).

Education.—The school system of California has been inaugurated on a scale proportionate to the magnitude of the natural and industrial features of the state. In 1899 there were 253,397 children attending the public schools, 20,768 attending private schools. Among the higher educational institutions are the University of California, at Berkeley, and the Leland Stanford, Jr., University, at Palo Alto, both largely endowed. They are the most important institutions of learning W. of the Mississippi River. Among other collegiate institutions are the University of Southern California, at Los Angeles, with agricultural school at Ontario; California School of Mechanical Arts, at San Francisco; University of the Pacific, at San José; and Santa Clara College, at Santa Clara. There are 4 public normal schools. The famous Lick Astronomical Observatory is situated at Mount Hamilton.

Population.—The population of California in 1850 was 92,597; in 1860, 379,994; in 1870, 560,247; in 1880, 864,694; in 1890, 1,208,130; and in 1900, 1,485,053, of whom 45,753 were Chinese, 10,151 Japanese (75,218 Asiatics in 1890), 11,045 negroes, and 15,377 Indians (taxed and untaxed).

Government.—The present state constitution became operative in 1879. The governor is chosen for a term of 4 years. The legislature consists of a senate of 40 members, chosen for 4 years, and a house of representatives, 80 in number, chosen for 2 years. The state has 8 representatives in the lower house of the national congress.

History.—California was the New or Upper California of the Spaniards and Mexicans, so called to distinguish it from the Californian peninsula or Lower California, which is a territory of Mexico. Its coast was visited by Cabrillo in 1543, by Drake in 1579 (he named it New Albion), and by Sebastian Viscayno in 1602. In 1769 the Franciscans planted colonies at San Diego. In 1776 they established the mission of Dolores at San Francisco, and ere long they had numbers of these agricultural missions, which they carried on by the aid of the Indians. The country had after this a large export trade in wool and hides, and the fathers of the mission became very wealthy. After 1821, when Mexico was freed from Spanish domination, Mexican and other settlers began to come in. Fremont's first exploring expedition, which carried him over the Sierra Nevada in 1844, aroused no small interest in Upper California, and some thousands of Americans entered the country in consequence. In 1846, during the Mexican war, Commodore Sloat and Stockton occupied the most important points along the coast, and, with aid from General S. W. Kearney and Colonel Fremont, subjected the territory to the authority of the United States. The possession was confirmed to the United States by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, Feb., 1848. In 1848 gold was discovered, and the rush of adventurers to California began. They poured in from every part of the world, peopling the region with unexampled rapidity. In 1849 a state constitution was framed, and in 1850 the state was admitted to the Union. In 1869, California was brought into railway connection with the rest of the United States.

California, a post-town of Campbell co., Ky., on the Ohio River, 8 miles from Butler station. Pop. in 1900, 292.

California, a post-village of St. Mary co., Md., about 6 miles E. by S. of Leonardtown.

California, a post-village of Branch co., Mich., about 14 miles S. by E. of Coldwater. Pop. about 150.

California, a banking city, capital of Montevideo co., Mo., on the Missouri Pacific R., 150 miles W. of St. Louis. It manufactures wagons, drugs, soda-water, harness, etc. Pop. in 1900, 2181. It ships large quantities of grain and live-stock.

California, a post-village of Hamilton co., Ohio, 3½ miles from Columbia, which is a suburb of Cincinnati.

California, a banking post-borough of Washington co., Pa., on the Monongahela River, 50 miles S. of Pittsburgh and 5 miles below Brownsville. It is on the Pennsylvania R. It has various manufactures and coaling interests. Here is the Southwestern State Normal School. Steamboats ply between this place and Pittsburgh. Pop. in 1900, 2009.

California, Gulf of, originally called the Sea of Cortés, an arm of the Pacific, separating Lower California on the W. from the states of Sonora and Sinaloa, Mexico, on the E. Length, about 700 miles; breadth varies from about 50 to 120 miles. Its coast is irregular, forming on both sides many small bays or gulfs. It contains numerous islands (Ángel de la Guardia, Tiburón, Cármen, Espíritu Santo, Cerálbo, etc.), and at its N. extremity it receives the river Colorado. The settlements of Santa Rosalía, Mulegé, La Paz, and Guaymas are on its shores. The depth of water in the southern section reaches 6000 feet, but decreases towards the north, the shallows formed by the Colorado sediments being very extensive. The gulf, which has long been noted for its pearl-fishery, appears to be a subsided block of the earth's crust.

California Junction, a post-station of Harrison co., Iowa, 70 miles S. of Sioux City.

California, Lower or Old (Sp. Baja or Vieja California, bá'ná or ve-á'ná ká-le-for-ne-á), a territory of Mexico, on the W. coast, formed of a peninsula lying from NW. to SE., about 770 miles long by from 30 to 120 broad, and extending from Cape St. Lucas, its most S. point, lat. 22° 52' N., lon. 109° 53' W., to lat. 32° 30' N.; bounded N. by the state of California, E. principally by the Gulf of California, and S. and W. by the Pacific Ocean. Area, 58,400 sq. m. The peninsula is traversed throughout a large or the greater part of its length by one or more chains of mountains, which are orographically and structurally continuations of the Sierra Nevada of California, and in the Cerro del Gigante or the Sierra de la Gigantes attain elevations of 4000-4500 feet. The descent on the gulf side is exceedingly abrupt, while it is generally gradual towards the west. The mountains are composed largely of granites and granitoid rocks, and carry with them, or are fringed by, comparatively young Tertiary deposits. Volcanic rocks are very abundant, and the soil is largely formed of decomposed lava. In the extreme south the granite and volcanic ridges take a more nearly E. and W. direction, and several summits seem to exceed 8000 feet in height. The region is largely devoid of running water, and except in a few points is almost wholly lacking in means of irrigation. The rainfall is a markedly deficient one, but violent showers of short duration, resulting in the sheet-flooding of the country, are not uncommon. The climate is hot and dry in the N., but is more temperate towards the S. and in much of the coast region. Vegetation is largely deficient, but there are numerous areas of luxurious agricultural development. The more fertile spots yield maize, manioc, wheat, beans, peas, and esculent roots, excellent grapes, from which wine is made, oranges, lemons, limes, citrons, prunes, dates, plantains, pine-apples, etc. The henequén or Sisal hemp is grown in the central regions of the peninsula and in some parts of the Colorado River tract, while the archil or Spanish moss covers a large area along the west coast. The mountains feed sheep and goats; and to a small extent horses, mules, cattle, and pigs are reared. The sea is stored with fish in incredible abundance and variety. A form of pearl oyster is obtained in the gulf, and was formerly much more extensively fished than at present. The mineral resources include gold, silver, copper, lead, and coal, the first-named being found in reefs and in placer deposits. Mines have been extensively worked in the municipalities of La Paz, San Antonio, Santiago, Mulegé, Comandú, Santa Rosalía, etc. The chief towns are La Paz, the capital, near the S.E. extremity of the peninsula, and the open ports of Ensenada de Todos Santos, the chief town of the northern districts, San José del Cabo, and Santa Rosalía. Among the larger islands that belong to the territory, many of which have good harbors, are Cerros, Cármen, Ángel de la Guardia, Santa Catalina, Cerralbo, and San José. Lower California was discovered by Hernando de Grijalva in 1534. In 1642 the Jesuits formed establishments in it; they taught the natives the art of cultivating the ground, and raised them greatly in the scale of civilisation. In the reign of Philip V., more especially subsequent to 1744, the Spanish establishments in California increased, and became very considerable. In a very few years the Jesuits built 16 villages in the interior of the peninsula; but in 1767 they were expelled, and the administration was committed to monks of the Dominican order, who did not maintain the same career of usefulness as their predecessors. For administrative purposes the territory is now divided into two districts, the district of the north and that of the south. Pop. in 1900, 47,682.

Calimera, ká-le-má'rá, a town of Italy, province of Lecce, 13½ miles NW. of Otranto. Pop. about 3500.

Calimere (ká-lé-meer') Point, a cape on the Coromandel coast of British India. Lat. 10° 17' N.; lon. 79° 50' E.

Caling'apatam', a seaport town of British India, in Madras, on the Bay of Bengal, 16 miles ENE. of Chisacole.

Calispell, a post-village of Stevens co., Wash., 32 miles SE. of Colville.

Calistoga, kál-is-to'ga, a banking post-town of Napa co., Cal., on the Southern Pacific R., 7½ miles N. of San Francisco, in the Napa Valley, about 3 miles from the base of Mount St. Helena. It has warm mineral springs and is a health-resort. Its chief industries are wine-making, mining, and fruit-growing. Pop. in 1900, 690.

Calitri, ká-lee'tree, a town of Italy, province of Avellino, near the Ofanto, 7 miles ENE. of Conza. Pop. in 1901, 7651.

Calikini, a town of Yucatan, Mexico, state and 40 miles NE. of Campeche.

Calikins, a post-village of Wayne co., Pa.

Calikinsville, kaw'k-ins-vil, a post-village of Isabella co., Mich., 8 miles S. of Clare.

Call, a post-village of Newton co., Tex.

Callac, kál'lák', a small town of France, department of Côtes-du-Nord, 37 miles WSW. of St. Briec.

Callaghan, a post-hamlet of Alleghany co., Va., on the Chesapeake and Ohio R., 5 miles NW. of Covington.

Callahan, kál'le-hán, a county in the northwest-central part of Texas, has an area of 882 sq. m. It is partly drained by the Pecan River. The surface is diversified by mountains, among which are East Caddo Peak and West Caddo Peak. Capital, Baird. Pop. in 1890, 5457; in 1900, 8768.

Callahan, a post-village of Siskiyou co., Cal., 80 miles from Redding. Pop. about 250.

Callahan, a post-village of Nassau co., Fla., 27 miles by rail WSW. of Fernandina. Pop. about 100.

Callan, a town of Ireland, co. and 8 miles SW. of Kilkenny. Pop. about 2000.

Callanans Corners, a post-village of Albany co., N.Y., 12 miles SSW. of Albany.

Callander, a town of Scotland, co. and 30 miles WSW. of Perth and about 12 miles from Loch Katrine. It is a great tourist-centre. Pop. about 1500.

Callands, a post-village of Pittsylvania co., Va.

Callao, kál'yá-o, a town (constituting a small department) of Peru, and its principal seaport, on the Pacific Ocean, 6 miles by rail W. of Lima. Lat. 12° 4' S. It is situated on the spacious Callao Bay, and its anchorage, partly sheltered by two islands, has been improved by harbor-walls and a massive mole. There are floating- and wet-docks. It has gas-works, sugar-refineries, machine-shops, and steam-cranes for loading and unloading ships, is well fortified, and ships orcs, hides, guano (in diminished quantity), salt, sugar, wool, etc. Old Callao, whose ruins are still in part visible in the water, was almost completely wrecked by the earthquake of 1746, when nearly 4000 of its inhabitants perished, largely as the result of an oceanic earthquake wave. Pop. in 1896, 48,118. Callao is the starting point of the great Oroya railway.

Callao, a banking post-village of Macon co., Mo., on the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy R., 9 miles W. of Macon. Pop. in 1900, 498.

Callas, a town of France, department of Var, 5 miles NE. of Draguignan. Pop. about 1000.

Callaway, or Calloway, kál'la-way, a county in the SW. part of Kentucky, bordering on Tennessee. Area, 402 sq. m. It is bounded on the E. by the Tennessee River and is also drained by Clark's River. Capital, Murray. Pop. in 1890, 14,675; in 1900, 17,633.

Callaway, a county in the east-central part of Missouri, has an area of 830 sq. m. It is bounded on the S. by the Missouri River and on the W. by Cedar Creek, and also drained by the Loutre River. Coal and fine limestone are found in abundance. Capital, Fulton. Pop. in 1890, 25,131; in 1900, 25,984.

Callaway, a post-village of Bell co., Ky. Pop. 75.

Callaway, a post-station of Calloway co., Mo., 4 miles N. of Fulton.

Callaway, a banking post-town of Custer co., Neb., on the Union Pacific R., 25 miles SW. of Broken Bow. Pop. in 1900, 406.

Callaway, a post-village of Franklin co., Va., 25 miles S. of Biglick.

Calle-Calle, a small river of Chile, at the mouth of which is the city of Valdivia.

Callenberg, kál'en-béng', a castle near Coburg, Germany. The picturesque view from it attracts many tourists.

Callender, a banking post-town of Webster co., Pa., on the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific R., 15 miles S. of Fort Dodge. Pop. in 1900, 399.

Cambodia, or Kamboja (Fr. Cambodge, kām'bój'), a kingdom in the SE. of Asia, constituting a French protectorate, and included in the general government of Indo-China. It is situated SE. of Siam, and is bounded on the E. by Annam and on the SE. by Cochín-China, and is washed on the SW. by the Gulf of Siam. It lies between lat. 10° and 14° N. and lon. 103° and 107° E. It consists in great part of the alluvial plain of the Mekong, which traverses the country from N. to S., periodically flooding vast areas. A portion of the delta of this great river is included in Cambodia. Forest-clad mountains, nowhere attaining an elevation of more than about 4000 feet, bound and encroach upon this plain on the NE. and W. From the point where the Mekong enters upon its final bend towards the E., at Pnom-penh, an arm, of great volume in the wet season, proceeds from the river in a NW. direction towards Lake Tonlé-sap (called also Bien-hoa, the "Great Lake"), which lies partly in Cambodia and partly in Siam. This lake, the extraordinary fluctuations in whose dimensions render it one of the most remarkable bodies of water on the globe, acts as a mighty regulating reservoir, for the Mekong sends a great volume of water into it when the level of the lake is lower than that of the river, and receives a vast accession from it when the level of the river falls below that of the lake. The climate of Cambodia is rather temperate for a region situated midway between the equator and the tropic. The summer-time is the rainy season, which lasts for a number of months. The productions include rice (which is the chief food of the people and is exported in large quantities), maize, beans, sugar, cotton, tobacco, indigo, pepper, cinnamon, coffee, vanilla, cardamoms, gums, manioc, rames, casouthouc, gutta-percha, and betel-nuts. The forests yield valuable timber. Silk is produced and woven into fine fabrics. The fisheries of Lake Tonlé-sap constitute a vast industry, and salt-fish is a leading article of export. Wild animals are abundant, including tigers, leopards, elephants, rhinoceroses, and wild cattle. Ivory and rhinoceros- and buffalo-horns figure among the articles of export.

The population of Cambodia, according to the most probable estimate, does not greatly exceed 1,000,000. It is placed by some as high as 1,500,000. It consists of Cambodians, or Khmers, who constitute the bulk of the people, Chinese (between 100,000 and 150,000), Annamese (between 70,000 and 100,000), and Malays. The Kui and other un-civilized tribes are met with in the mountain districts. The language of the Cambodians proper is akin to the Siamese and Annamese; its alphabetic characters are borrowed from the Pali. Their religion is a kind of Buddhism, intermixed with Brahmanic elements. Large numbers of Annamese have been converted to Catholicism. Cambodia is governed by a king, who rules with despotic sway. The capital is Pnom-penh, where the authority of France is represented by a resident-in-chief. The officials are natives, but matters relating to taxes, customs, and public works are controlled by the French. The principal towns are Pnom-penh, Kampot (the only seaport), Udong, Pnyalu, and Sambar. The old realm of the Khmers was one of great extent and power. It was at the height of its greatness in the earlier part of the Middle Ages. Its splendor is attested by the imposing ruins of Angkor Vat (in territory now belonging to Siam), near Lake Tonlé-sap. These remains of cities, palaces, artificial lakes, and bridges show the ancient Khmers to have been a race of builders and engineers. The French protectorate dates from 1863, although it was not recognized by Siam until 1867.

Pop. in 1891, 188,862; in 1901, 184,759.

Cambridge, kām'brīj (L. Castrabrigia), a town and parliamentary borough of England, capital of the co. of Cambridge, and the seat of one of the great English universities, situated on both sides of the little river Cam, 49 miles (direct) N. by E. of London. Lat. of the observatory,  $52^{\circ} 12' 52''$  N.; lon.  $0^{\circ} 5' 41''$  E. The town, in an extensive flat, embosomed among lofty trees, has, with few exceptions only, narrow, winding, and irregularly built streets; but its colleges are noble edifices. Among the more noteworthy buildings connected with the town are St. Mary's, Round, Trinity, St. Sepulchre's, St. Clement's, St. Edward's, and St. Benedict's churches; the shire-hall, town-hall, and jail, enclosing remains of the ancient castle; and a house of correction and industry, founded by Hobson, the eccentric carrier, to whom is referred the expression "Hobson's Choice." Cambridge has various forms of industry, but its trade is no longer important. The town (independent of its university) sends 1 member to the House of Commons.

The University of Cambridge, founded at an uncertain period in the Middle Ages, consists at present of 17 colleges. Each college is a body corporate, internally governed by its own statutes and maintained by the endowments of the several founders and benefactors. Some of the college buildings are among the most interesting and venerable piles in the kingdom. As in Oxford, candidates for university honors rely largely on the teaching of private tutors. Mathematics (though not to the exclusion of classical and other learning) forms an important branch of study at Cambridge, and latterly biology has taken a prominent position in the general curriculum. Bacon, Newton, and many of the greatest divines and poets of Britain conferred lustre on this school. Among the best-known colleges of the university are Peterhouse, the oldest, founded in 1284; Pembroke, founded in 1347; Corpus Christi (1352), King's (1440), Clare (1326), Trinity (the largest college of England, with a library of 100,000 volumes), St. John's, Magdalen (containing the Pepsian library), Caius, Jesus, and Christ's. The general library of the university contains 450,000 volumes. Among the interesting buildings associated with the university are Senate House, Trinity Hall, the New Museums, and the Fitzwilliam Museum of paintings and antiquities. In partial affiliation with the university are the two colleges for women: Girton, established in 1869, and Newnham, established in 1875. The university sends 2 members to the House of Commons, who are chosen by the senate. The number of matriculated students was, in 1903, 2878.

Cambridge is a town of great antiquity; in Domesday Book, where it is described as an important place, it is called Grentebriige, from one of the names of the river, the present name, derived from the modern name of the river Cam, being comparatively recent. In 871 it was burnt by the Danes, and again in 1010. Of the ancient castle built by William the Conqueror on the site of a Roman station, and for some years used as a county jail, only the gateway now remains. Pop. in 1891, 36,983; in 1901, 38,379.

Cambridge, a city and semi-capital of Middlesex co., Mass., separated from Boston by the Charles River, in lat. (observatory)  $42^{\circ} 22' 47''$  N., lon.  $71^{\circ} 7' 45''$  W. It comprises "Old Cambridge," the seat of Harvard University, East Cambridge (formerly Lechmere Point), Cambridgeport, about midway between Old Cambridge and Boston, the district called North Cambridge, and Mount Auburn. Old Cambridge, or Cambridge proper, 2½ miles NW. of Boston, is delightfully situated in the midst of a beautiful plain extending from the Charles River. The streets are generally broad and shaded with lofty elms. The principal object of interest in the place is Harvard University, the oldest and one of the best-endowed collegiate institutions in the United States. It was founded in 1636, and derives its name from the Rev. John Harvard, who bequeathed it a legacy of about £780. Besides the collegiate department proper, the university embraces schools of law, theology, medicine, dentistry, special science (Lawrence Scientific School), agriculture and arboriculture (Bussey Institution, at Jamaica Plains), and veterinary science. Associated with it are an observatory, botanical garden, art museum, museum of archaeology (Peabody Museum), and the famous museum of natural history with which the name of Agassiz is inseparably connected (Museum of Comparative Zoology, or Agassiz Museum). The buildings of the medical, dental, and veterinary schools are located in Boston. Among the more prominent buildings associated with the university are Memorial Hall (containing the Sanders Theatre), University Hall, Massachusetts Hall (1720—the oldest of the existing college buildings), Gore Hall (containing the university library, with upward of 600,000 volumes), and the Boylston Chemical Laboratory. The number of regular students enrolled for the term 1902-1903 was 4261. In affiliation with the university is Radcliffe College, founded in 1879, and giving instruction to women.

Cambridge has been the home of a number of the most prominent literary men of the United States. "Craigie House" and "Elmwood," the homes of Longfellow and Lowell, are points of interest to the tourist. West of the city is Mount Auburn Cemetery, which contains the graves of Longfellow, Lowell, Prescott, Motley, Holmes, Agassiz, Everett, Josiah Quincy, Channing, Rufus Choate, Brooks, and other eminent men.

Cambridge is one of the oldest towns in New England, having been settled in 1630. It first took the name of Newtown, which was soon after changed for its present one. The Bay Psalm-Book, the first book printed in British America, was issued here by Stephen Day in 1640; and printing is still one of the principal industries of the place. During the Revolutionary War the American army was encamped in Cambridge while the British had possession of Boston. The British troops that surrendered under Burgoyne at Saratoga were quartered here in 1777 as prisoners of war. Camporeale, kám-po-rá-á'lá, a town of Sicily, province of Trapani, 12 miles SE. of Alcamo. Pop. about 5500.

Campos, kám'pooch, formerly São Salvador dos Campos, a city of Brazil, state and 140 miles NE. of Rio Janeiro, with which it is connected by rail. It is on the Parahiba do Sul, near its mouth in the Atlantic. The city is situated in the midst of fertile plains, which produce an abundance of sugar-cane, yielding the best sugar grown in Brazil. It has electric illumination, a theatre, etc. Small steamboats ascend the river to Campos. Pop. in 1890, 78,036.

Campos, kám'pooce, a town of the island of Majorca, 21 miles SE. of Palma. Pop. in 1900, 4611.

Campo San Piero, kám'po sán pe-á'ro, or Campo Sampiero, kám'po sán-pe-á'ro, a town of Italy, 13 miles N. of Padua. Pop. about 1000 (commune, 4500).

Camposanto, kám-po-sán'to, a village of Italy, province of Modena, on the Panaro, SW. of Finale.

Campo Seco, kám'po sá'ko, a post-hamlet of Calaveras co., Cal., 50 miles SE. of Sacramento.

Camp Point, a banking post-village of Adams co., Ill., on the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy R. at its junction with the Wabash R., 21 miles ENE. of Quincy. Pop. in 1900, 1260.

Camprodón, kám-pro-dón', a town of Spain, in Catalonia, 32 miles NW. of Gerona, on the Ter. Pop. about 1500.

Camp Sansaba, a post-village of McCulloch co., Tex.

Campsie, a village of Scotland, co. and 15 miles SW. of Stirling.

Campsie-Fells, Scotland, a range of hills N. of the village of Campsie, rising to a height of nearly 1900 feet.

Campspring, a post-hamlet of Lawrence co., Ala., 20 miles from Hillsboro.

Campiti, kám'p'te, a post-village of Natchitoches parish, La., on the Red River, 100 miles below Shreveport. Pop. about 300.

Campton, a post-town, capital of Wolfe co., Ky., about 65 miles ESE. of Lexington. Pop. in 1900, 276.

Campton, a post-township (town) of Grafton co., N.H., 6 miles N. of Plymouth, is intersected by the Pemigewasset River. It contains Campton Village. It is a favorite resort for artists and presents picturesque scenery. Pop. in 1900, 999.

Campton, a post-hamlet of Spartanburg co., S.C., 9 miles SW. of Spartanburg.

Campton Village, a post-village of Grafton co., N.H., in Campton township (town), on the Pemigewasset River, about 9 miles N. of Plymouth.

Camptonville, a post-village of Yuba co., Cal., 45 miles NE. of Marysville. Pop. about 300.

Camtown, a post-village of Bradford co., Pa., on Wyalusing Creek, 5 miles from Wyalusing station and about 40 miles NW. of Scranton.

Campulung, or Kimpulung, kim-poo-loong', a town of Rumania, in Wallachia, 80 miles NW. of Bucharest. It is picturesquely situated in a valley of the Transylvanian Alps, and is a summer-resort. Pop. in 1899, 13,043.

Campus, a banking post-village of Livingston co., Ill., on the Wabash R., 73 miles SW. of Chicago. Pop. in 1900, 226.

Campus, a post-village of Wyoming co., W.Va. Its banking point is Logan.

Campus Munitus, an ancient name of CHAMOUNI.

Campus Stellis. See SANTIAGO DE COMPOSTELA.

Camp Verde (vén'dá), a post-village of Yavapai co., Ariz., 41 miles SE. of Prescott. Pop. 150.

Campville, a post-village of Litchfield co., Conn., on the Naugatuck River and on the New York, New Haven and Hartford R., 14 miles N. of Waterbury. Pop. 200.

Campville, a post-village of Alachua co., Fla., on the Seaboard Air Line, 9 miles S. by E. of Waldo. Pop. about 150.

Campville, a post-village of Tioga co., N.Y., on the Susquehanna River and on the Erie R., 7 miles E. of Owego.

Camroden, a post-hamlet of Oneida co., N.Y., 13 miles NW. of Utica.

Camtoos, kám-tsoe' or kam-toos', or Gam'toos', a river of South Africa, in Cape Colony, rises in the Nieuw-veld mountains and enters the sea 20 miles SW. of Uitenhage. Length, about 200 miles.

Camulos, a post-village of Ventura co., Cal., 48 miles by rail NW. of Los Angeles. It is noted as the home of Ramona, of Helen Hunt Jackson's romance.

Camuy, ká-moo'ee, a town in the NW. part, and on the N. coast, of Porto Rico, about 8 miles W. by N. of Arecibo, with which it is connected by rail. Pop. in 1899, 1763; of the district, 10,887.

Cana, ká'na, in New Testament history, a village of Palestine, the scene of the miracle recorded in John. Its site is supposed by some to be at Kanat-el-Jellil, 6 miles N. of Nazareth and 13 miles SE. of Acre, and by others at Kefr-Kenna, 3½ miles NE. of Nazareth.

Cana, a post-hamlet of Butte co., Cal., in the Sacramento Valley, and on the Southern Pacific R., 53 miles NNW. of Marysville.

Cana, a post-hamlet of Jennings co., Ind., 24 miles W. by N. of Madison.

Cana, a post-hamlet of Davie co., N.C., 25 miles N. of Salisbury.

Canaan. See PALESTINE.

Canaan, ká'nan, a post-township (town) of Litchfield co., Conn., on the Housatonic River. Pop. in 1900, 820.

Canaan, a banking post-village of Litchfield co., Conn., in North Canaan township (town), on the Housatonic River and on the New York, New Haven and Hartford and the Central New England R., 55 miles WNW. of Hartford. The town has furnaces for pig-iron, a quarry of 'white marble, lime-kilns, etc. Pop. of the town in 1900, 1803; of the village, about 950. One mile to the SE. is Canaan Mountain, 1500 feet, which affords a fine view.

Canaan, a post-village of Jefferson co., Ind., 12 miles NNE. of Madison.

Canaan, a post-village of Somerset co., Me., in Canaan township (town), 40 miles W. of Bangor. Pop. of the town in 1900, 977.

Canaan, a post-township of Gasconade co., Mo. Pop. 1511.

Canaan, a post-village (summer-resort) and township (town) of Grafton co., N.H., on the Boston and Maine R., 13 miles E. of Lebanon, its banking point. It has manufactures of lumber, shirts, overalls, etc. Pop. of the town in 1900, 1444; of the village, about 900. See also EAST CANAAN and CANAAN STREET.

Canaan, a post-township (town) of Columbia co., N.Y., about 20 miles NE. of Hudson, is intersected by the Boston and Albany R. It contains a post-village named Canaan Four Corners, a Shaker community, and a hamlet named Canaan Center. Pop. in 1900, 1307.

Canaan, Columbia co., N.Y. See CANAAN FOUR CORNERS.

Canaan, a post-village of Wayne co., Ohio, about 24 miles WSW. of Akron. Pop. about 250.

Canaan, a township of Wayne co., Pa., about 9 miles W. of Honesdale. Pop. in 1900, 485.

Canaan, a post-township (town) of Essex co., Vt., forming the NE. extremity of the state. It is bounded on the E. by the Connecticut River. It contains a hamlet named Canaan. Pop. in 1900, 934.

Canaan, a post-village of Russell co., Ontario, 23 miles from Ottawa, its banking point. Pop. about 300.

Canaan Center, a post-hamlet of Columbia co., N.Y., in Canaan township (town), 33 miles SE. of Albany.

Canaan Four Corners, a post-village of Columbia co., N.Y., in Canaan township (town), on the Boston and Albany R., 34 miles SE. of Albany. Pop. about 250.

Canaan Street, a post-village and summer-resort of Grafton co., N.H. The banking point is Concord or Lebanon. Pop. about 275.

Canaan Valley, Litchfield co., Conn. See EAST CANAAN.

Canaanville, ká'nan-vil, a post-hamlet of Athens co., Ohio, on the Baltimore and Ohio Southwestern R., 7 miles E. of Athens.

Canada (kan'á-dá), DOMINION OF, a federal union of provinces and territories, comprising all the British possessions in North America, except Newfoundland, the West India Colonies, and British Honduras. It is bounded E. by the Atlantic Ocean, Davis Strait, and Baffin Bay; W. by Alaska and the Pacific Ocean; N. by the Arctic Ocean; and S. by the United States. Its divisions, partly including and partly excluding the water-areas, are as follows:

Divisions.	Area in sq. m.	Pop. in 1901.
British Columbia.....	373,000	190,000
Manitoba.....	74,000	246,464
New Brunswick.....	28,300	331,006
Nova Scotia.....	21,000	459,116
Ontario.....	260,000	2,167,978
Prince Edward Island.....	2,300	103,258
Quebec.....	355,000	1,620,974
Territories and districts, including Alberta, Assiniboia, Athabasca, Franklin (the Arctic Archipelago, with Boothia and Melville peninsulas), Keewatin, Mackenzie, Saskatchewan, Ungava, and Yukon.....	2,500,000	220,000
Total (in round figures).....	3,600,000	5,338,883

Relief of the Land.—The main portion of Canada may be physiographically divided into three divisions: 1, an eastern region, extending from the Atlantic to the western border of Lake Superior and Hudson Bay (which penetrates three-fourths through the width of the mainland), and comprising the ancient rock-masses, with the Labrador peninsula, which have been described as the greater nucleus or protaxis of the North American continent; 2, a central division, which lies between the first and the eastern base of the Rocky Mountains, and which continues as a great interior continental plain from the United States boundary to the Arctic waters; and 3, the region beyond this, comprised mainly in the mountain-masses of the Rocky Mountain system. Too little is known constructionally of the islands of the Arctic Archipelago to permit of a statement of their absolute relations, but there seems to be no question that they represent a part of the continental main which has undergone disruption through subsidence. A large part of the eastern section is in the form of a swelling table-land, having an elevation of 1500–2000 feet, with much greater heights, 6000–8000 feet, along the N.E. coast of Labrador. A range of elevations, known as the Height of Land, occupies the south-central portions of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, and is the water-parting between the streams that are tributary to the Hudson Bay and St. Lawrence basins respectively. The Appalachian Mountains of the United States are continued into New Brunswick and the Acadian region of Quebec, where they terminate in the promontory of Gaspé. The highest ridges of this system are found in the Shickshock Mountains, which border the estuary of the St. Lawrence on the S. See LABRADOR, NEW BRUNSWICK, and NOVA SCOTIA.

The Great Interior Plain, which constitutes the second division, has but few salient reliefs, rising westward to elevations of 3000–4000 feet at the foot of the Rocky Mountains, but continuing in the main as depressed lowland, with alternating steppe, prairie, and woodland features, to the Arctic Ocean. With a width in the S. of about 800 miles, it occupies the position of the ancient arm of the Gulf of Mexico, which, still in the Cretaceous period, divided the North American continent into an eastern and a western half. The constructing beds are still in the main horizontal or nearly so, and made up of the lacustrine deposits which were laid down in the numerous landlocked basins of brackish and fresh water which succeeded the recession of the sea. The soil over a large part of this region is marked by extreme fertility, but over large areas there is a deficiency of rainfall, and the country is made too arid for profitable agriculture. The interior plain is pre-eminently a region of lakes and intercommunicating water-courses, some of which are tributary to the Arctic Ocean and others to Hudson Bay. A large part of the northern area is drained by the Mackenzie River.

The Rocky Mountain or Cordilleran Region is made up of the bold and comparatively recent Rocky Mountains proper and of the Coast Ranges, with intermediate lines of semi-independent ranges (Selkirk, Gold Range, etc.) and of included lofty plateaus, like that of British Columbia. A large part of the western Cordillera has a strictly Alpine character, with many summits rising far into eternal snow and supporting giant glaciers. Recent explorations have revealed a number of summits, in the region of the headwaters of the North Saskatchewan and Athabasca Rivers (Columbia, Bryce, Alberta, Forbes), which are assumed to be 13,000–14,000 feet in elevation. Other summits, some of which are in the main Rocky Mountains and others in the Selkirk, are Balfour, 10,875 ft.; Stephen, 10,425 ft.;

Victoria, 11,500 ft.; Lefroy, 11,400 ft.; Goodwin, 11,600 ft.; Sir Donald, 10,645 ft.; Dawson, 10,800 ft.; and Bonney, 10,625 ft. (See ROCKY MOUNTAINS and SELKIRKS.) West of the continental border, which has largely the fjord-structure of the Scandinavian Peninsula, is a chain of ruggedly mountainous islands (Vancouver, Queen Charlotte, Prince of Wales), which extend from Puget Sound nearly to the Alaskan boundary. The culminating point of all Canada is seemingly Mount Logan, about 19,000 ft., which lies close to Mt. St. Elias, in Alaska.

Rivers and Interior Waters.—The principal rivers of Canada are the St. Lawrence, flowing into the Atlantic; the Saskatchewan (Nelson), to Hudson Bay; the Fraser, to Puget Sound (Pacific Ocean); and the Mackenzie, to the Arctic Ocean. The Columbia and Yukon Rivers have their sources in Canada, but the main part of their courses lies outside of the Canadian domain. (See descriptions of these rivers and of the HAMILTON [Labrador], ALBANY, CHURCHILL, ATHABASCA, GREAT SLAVE, GREAT FISH, etc.) Of the Great Lakes, parts of Ontario, Erie, Huron, and Superior belong to Canada. (See the notices under these heads.) Other large bodies of water are Lakes Winnipeg, Athabasca, Great Slave, and Great Bear. See HUDSON BAY.

Climate.—The climate of Canada, except in restricted areas, is of the continental type, with well-emphasized winter and summer temperatures. The extremes of heat and cold are strongly accentuated, a maximum summer temperature of 100° in the shade being of not rare occurrence in the south, while the cold in the same region not rarely reaches –45°. In the Arctic tracts of the north a minimum temperature of –70° has been observed, but even there the summer heat reaches 80° or higher. In the eastern provinces the mean annual temperature is considerably lower than that of correspondingly located places of the European coast. The winters are long and severe and snow remains on the ground continuously for months. The Pacific coast, which to a certain extent receives the warming effects of the Japanese Current, enjoys a markedly mild climate, especially in its southerly parts, where long-lying snow, except on the mountain heights, is almost entirely unknown. The region is most luxuriantly wooded, in marked contrast to the bleak heights of Labrador, a benefit which it derives in great part from the abundance of rainfall. To the condensation and precipitation of the Pacific moisture is due primarily the aridity of much of the interior tracts, the eastern mountains of the Cordillera receiving but little of the rain that falls in the west.

Vegetable and Animal Productions.—The vast extent of Canada, and the great variety of its soils and climate, cause much diversity in its natural productions. The south-eastern provinces, with Quebec and Ontario, are by far the best developed and most thickly settled. They are still in large part densely timbered; and lumber, with other forest products, is one of the leading articles of export. The Pacific slope is also a forest region; but its trees are almost entirely of species unknown on the Atlantic slope. The great subarctic forest, which extends almost continuously from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and follows upon the zone of deciduous trees, is made up in the main of the larch and the black and white spruce, and is skirted by or includes zones of the cotton-wood (Populus tremuloides). North of this forest, with a southern limit determined by the length and warmth of the summer, and extending to the borders of the Arctic Sea, is the vast expanse of tundra or “Barren Grounds,” a region of desolate and partially frozen mosses, grass, and lichen. The northern limit of forest-trees is found (north of Dawson) in about lat. 67°. The value of the forest products in 1902 was $35,309,000. The cultivated plants include all or nearly all those grown in the northern United States. Some regions, like Prince Edward Island, are of very marked fertility. Although the winter is longer than in the United States, and spring and autumn shorter, the summer, or growing season of plants, is in all the settled portions long enough for the development of most cereals, including, in Ontario, even corn. Recent experiments made in the Yukon district, in the vicinity of Dawson (beyond the 64th parallel), have shown that even in that far northern tract, in favored locations of sunshine, barley, rye, and oats, besides various garden vegetables,—cabbage, turnip, carrot, lettuce, peas, and beans,—will ripen and may be profitably cultivated. Canada is destined to occupy in the near future the position of one of the great granaries of the world. The rich soil of Ontario and Manitoba yields bountiful crops of wheat, and the plains of the far West are only awaiting settlement to produce rich harvests. The dairy industry realizes a vast product. Among the native animals are the black, white, and grizzly bears, deer of several species (including the reindeer, moose, wapiti, and others), the buffalo, Rocky Mountain sheep and goat, musk-ox, and pronghorn-antelope. The fur-trade has in the far north one of its principal seats. Among fur-bearing animals are the beaver, muskrat, sable, fisher, mink, ermine, otter, seal, and others. The sea-otter and fur-seal are taken, though sparingly, on the Pacific coast. Hudson Bay and the Arctic waters abound in whales. The white whale occurs in the St. Lawrence and its estuary. The avifauna of the Dominion is very rich. Its fisheries are of the first importance, and the catch includes cod, mackerel, herring, salmon, ling, trout, halibut, and other valuable species. The total value of the fish product in 1901 was about $25,737,000, the salmon-fisheries contributing $7,221,000, and the cod-fisheries $4,033,000. The number of persons employed in the fisheries is about 80,000.

Mineral Resources.—The mineral wealth of Canada is very important, the minerals of economic value, besides building-stones, being gold, copper, lead, silver, nickel, coal, lignite, graphite, asbestos, and gypsum. Gold is obtained extensively from both auriferous quartz-veins and placer-deposits, the workings in British Columbia and in the more recently discovered Klondike region being conducted on a large and profitable scale. (See BRITISH COLUMBIA and KLONDIKE.) Coal of Carboniferous age is extensively mined in Nova Scotia and Cape Breton, and in less quantity in New Brunswick. The nickel deposits of the Sudbury region, N. of Georgian Bay, are among the richest in the world. Petroleum and natural gas are found in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario. Vast deposits of lignite or brown coal, changed in some parts into true bituminous coals and anthracite, are found in the vast interior region. These lignitic-bituminous coals, of Cretaceous and Tertiary age, are extensively developed in Vancouver and Queen Charlotte Islands, the beds in Vancouver being extensively worked. The value of the mineral products of Canada in 1902 was $64,970,000. The chief items were: gold, $20,741,000; coal, $15,539,000; nickel, $5,026,000; copper, $4,554,000; silver, $2,281,000; iron, $2,108,000; Portland cement, $1,027,000; asbestos, $1,203,000; lead, $936,000.

The manufacturing industry of Canada is principally confined to the provinces long since settled. The sawing of lumber and the manufacture of potash, flour, leather, oils, fertilisers, sugar, beer, cheese, paper, machinery, and woollen and cotton goods are important interests, and since the organisation of the Dominion government other manufactures have been extensively developed. Ship-building is largely carried on in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. Water-power is almost everywhere abundant.

Public Works and Commerce.—Canada has an admirable system of canals navigable by vessels of large tonnage and mostly constructed at public expense. By means of these, sea-going vessels can go up the St. Lawrence to the cities on the Great Lakes; and the construction of minor canals (Rideau, etc.) has permitted of navigation into remoter regions of the interior. The railway system of Canada embraced, in 1901, 18,294 miles of track. The main line of the Canadian Pacific R., extending from Montreal to Vancouver, is 2906 miles in length. The commerce is extensive. In the tonnage of her shipping Canada stands nearly in the front line of the countries of the world. The value of the exports in 1903 was $225,850,000; of the imports, $241,215,000. Among the chief items in the list of exports were: wood (about one-half to Great Britain), wood-pulp, and wood manufactures, $39,537,000; cheese (mainly to Great Britain), $24,713,000; wheat, $24,567,000; gold-bearing quartz, $16,438,000; bacon, $15,455,000; cattle, $11,343,000; butter, $6,955,000; coal, $5,452,000; wheat flour, $4,699,000. The leading articles of import are manufactures of iron and steel, textiles and the raw material of textiles, coal, sugar, and drugs and chemicals. The largest export trade is to Great Britain, and the chief import trade is from the United States. More than half the Dominion's revenue is derived from customs duties.

Government and Population.—The sovereign of the British empire is represented in Canada by a governor-general, and the Dominion is represented in London by an agent-general. The governor-general is assisted by a privy council, or ministry of fifteen, with the following titles: 1, prime minister (premier) and president of the council; 2, secretary of state; 3, minister of trade and commerce; 4, minister of justice and attorney-general; 5, minister of marine and fisheries; 6, minister of railways and canals; 7, minister of militia and defence; 8, minister of finance; 9, post-master-general; 10, minister of agriculture; 11, minister of public works; 12, minister of the interior; 13, minister of customs; 14, minister of inland revenue; and one member without portfolio. The chief magistrates of the provinces are called lieutenant-governors, and are appointed by the governor-general. Each province has its own ministry and legislature. The Canadian parliament consists of a senate (whose members are named by the governor-general, and who hold office for life) and of a house of commons, whose members are elected by the people for a term of five years, the number of members from the respective provinces being proportioned to the population. The senate, by the terms of the constitution, consists now of 81 members, as follows: from Ontario, 24; Quebec, 24; Nova Scotia, 10; New Brunswick, 10; Manitoba, 4; Prince Edward Island, 4; British Columbia, 3; territories, 2. There are now (1905) 214 members of the lower house. There is no state church. The leading religious denominations in the order of their numerical strength were in 1901 as follows: Roman Catholic, Methodist, Presbyterian, Anglican, Baptist, Lutheran, Congregational. Each province has its own school laws and its own system of jurisprudence. The chief cities are Montreal (pop. in 1901, 266,826), Toronto (207,971), Quebec (68,834), Ottawa, the capital (59,902), Hamilton (52,550), Winnipeg (42,336), Halifax (40,787), St. John (40,711), London (37,983), Vancouver (26,196), Victoria (20,821), and Kingston (18,043). Pop. of the Dominion in 1871, 3,686,639; in 1881, 4,324,810; in 1891, 4,833,239; in 1901, 5,338,883. Nearly one-third of the inhabitants are classed in the census as French-speaking. These constitute the greater part of the population of the province of Quebec.

History.—The first important explorations in Canada were made by a Frenchman, Jacques Cartier, who, in 1535-36, ascended the St. Lawrence River as far as the site of Montreal. The first permanent settlement was made by the French, under Champlain, at Quebec, in 1608. Champlain pushed his explorations into the region of the Great Lakes. In the course of the seventeenth century the Jesuits opened up a vast territory to the French, the region receiving the name of New France. Acadia (see ACADIA and NOVA SCOTIA) was ceded by France to England in 1713. In 1759-60 the British effected the conquest of Canada, which was formally relinquished by France in the treaty of Paris, 1763. In 1791 the provinces of Upper Canada (English-speaking Canada) and Lower Canada (French-speaking Canada) were constituted. The so-called Maritime Provinces—Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Cape Breton Island, and Prince Edward Island—continued under separate administrations. In 1841, Upper and Lower Canada were united under a common government. In 1867, Canada, Nova Scotia (to which Cape Breton Island had been administratively attached), and New Brunswick united to form the Dominion of Canada. The vast regions which had been administered by the Hudson's Bay Company were acquired and annexed under the title of the Northwest Territories in 1869-70. A portion was set off as the province of Manitoba in 1870. In 1871, British Columbia entered the confederacy, and Prince Edward Island followed in 1873. From the Northwest Territories have since been formed the provinces (and districts) of Keewatin, Alberta, Assiniboia, Athabasca, Saskatchewan, Yukon, and Mackenzie.

Canada, a post-hamlet of Genesee co., N.Y., 4 miles SE. of Batavia.

Canada Creek, a post-village of Kings co., Nova Scotia, on the Bay of Fundy, 9 miles N. by E. of Waterville. There is a light-house on Black Rock, at the entrance to this harbor. Pop. about 200.

Canada Lake, in Fulton co., N.Y., about 12 miles NW. of Gloversville. It is 3 miles long, amidst beautiful scenery, and has become a tourist-resort.

Canadaville, a post-hamlet of Fayette co., Tenn., 9 miles N. of Collierville.

Canadaway Creek, in Chautauqua co., N.Y., flows into Lake Erie.

Canadensis, a post-village and summer-resort of Monroe co., Pa., on Brodhead Creek, about 14 miles (direct) NW. of Stroudsburg. It is 3 miles from Oakland station.

Canadegera (kan-a-de-raw'ga) Lake, N.Y., in the N. part of Otsego co., is about 3½ miles long and 1½ miles wide. Its outlet joins that of Otsego Lake. About 1 mile above its head is Richfield Springs.

Canadian, ka-ná-de-an, a county in the central part of Oklahoma. Area, 803 sq. m. It is bounded S. by the Canadian River. Capital, El Reno. Pop. in 1890, 7158; in 1900, 15,981.

Canadian, a post-town of the Choctaw Nation, I.T., on the Missouri, Kansas and Texas R., 45 miles S. of Muskogee. The banking point is Juniata. Pop. in 1900, 522.

Canadian, a banking post-village, capital of Hemp-hill co., Tex., on the Canadian River and on the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé R., 100 miles NE. of Amarillo. Pop. about 400.

Canadian (or North Channel), one of the two passages (N. and S.) into which the estuary of the St. Lawrence is divided by the island of Anticosti. It is about 30 miles in breadth and contains numerous islands, the principal of which are the Mingan Islands.

Canadian River rises in the NE. part of New Mexico, runs eastward through Oklahoma and the northwestern part of Texas, and passes into the Indian Territory. Its general direction is eastward. It enters the Arkansas River about 45 miles above Fort Smith, Ark., and 30 miles S. by W. of Tahlequah. Its length is estimated at 900 miles. It is rather shallow and not important for navigation. Its largest affluent is the Rio Nutria, or North Fork of the Canadian, which, after a course of about 600 miles, enters the Canadian about 35 miles (direct) from its mouth.

Canadice, kan'-dis', a post-township (town) and village of Ontario co., N.Y. Pop. of the town in 1900, 674. Canadice post-office is about 30 miles S. of Rochester.

Canadice Lake, in the SW. part of Ontario co., N.Y., is about 3 miles long.

Canajoharie, kan-jo-hâr-ree, a banking post-village of Montgomery co., N.Y., in Canajoharie township (town), is on the S. bank of the Mohawk River and on the Erie Canal, 55 miles WNW. of Albany by the West Shore R. It has manufactures of butter and cheese, paper bags, etc. Pop. in 1900, 2101; of the town, 3888.

Canal, a post-village of Warriok co., Ind.

Canal, a post-township of Venango co., Pa., 9 miles NW. of Franklin. Pop. in 1900, 883.

Canaries, ka-nâ-rés, or Canary Islands (Sp. Canarias, kâ-nâ're-âs; supposed to be the Fortuna'ia In'sula,—i.e., "Happy Islands" of the ancients), an archipelago in the North Atlantic Ocean, belonging to Spain, of which they constitute a province, about 60 miles from the W. coast of Africa, between lat. 27° 40' and 29° 25' N. and lon. 13° 25' and 18° 16' W. They consist of 7 principal islands and many islets, arranged in the following order from E. to W.: Lanzarote and Fuerteventura, with the islets of Graciosa, Santa Clara, Alegranza, and Lobos; Gran Canaria, Tenerife (Tenerife), Gomera, Palma, and Hierro or Ferro. Area of the whole, about 2850 sq. m. Most of the islands are boldly mountainous, with rocky and abrupt coasts, and consisting almost entirely of ancient and modern volcanic rocks. The surface presents a succession of mountains and plains, extinct craters, and fertile valleys. Lanzarote was actively in eruption in 1824-25, and heated waters and vapors still issue from various parts of the Pico de Teyde, or Peak of Tenerife, whose elevation, 12,200 feet, is the greatest of any land-mass rising out of the Atlantic Ocean. La Cruz, in Palma, rises to 7740 feet, and Los Pechos, in Gran Canaria, to 6400 feet. There are no rivers, but numerous torrents. The tropical heat is moderated by the sea-breezes, and the climate is fairly equable. Winter is almost unknown. In October, the warmest month, the temperature varies from 78° to 87°; and in January, the coldest, it is from 60° to 66° near the sea, decreasing with the elevation. The rainy season commences in November and continues till February; during the dry season, from April to October, the weather is uniformly fine and the trade-winds blow steadily. E. and SE. winds are the scourge of these islands: blowing over the burning plains of Africa, they carry a hot and extremely dry air, which destroys vegetation and induces disease. Clouds of locusts are sometimes carried over by these winds. Fresh water is scarce, especially in the S. parts of the islands. The vegetation is not less interesting than the geological formation, and has in the main a south-European aspect, as is evidenced by the presence of the laurel, oak, pine, cedar, and chestnut. The more significant African elements of the flora are the dragon-tree, of which the famous tree of Orotava was a remarkable example, and the cactus-like euphorbias. Various forms of heath grow on the mountain-slopes. Most of the mammalian forms have been introduced, but even the commoner types have undergone considerable modification as a result of their isolation. The productions are cochineal, oil, grain, archil, barilla, silk, wine, raisins, tobacco, potatoes, sugar-cane, and fruits, and the surrounding seas abound in fish. The raising of the cochineal and the production of the manufactured article constitute a particularly important industry, the value of the export from this source being in some years as much as $6,000,000-$7,000,000. Wine was formerly one of the chief products, but, a fatal disease having attacked the vines, comparatively few grapes are now raised. The goat is among the most valuable of the domestic animals. The camel and the ass are used as beasts of burden. Among birds are the vulture, bustard, pheasant, wood-pigeon, red partridge, and thistle-finch or canary-bird. The inhabitants are of European origin, mostly Spanish; but many of the people claim partial descent from the Guanches, the old native race, who were of Berber stock and were a civilized people. The Canary Islands were known to the ancients under the name which they now bear, which was supposed to have been derived from the number of dogs (Latin canis, a "dog") which were found there. It was only towards the close of the Middle Ages that the Christian peoples of Europe first set foot on them. Early in the fifteenth century Jean de Béthencourt, a Norman navigator and adventurer, conquered a great part of the archipelago. His successor transferred his rights to the kingdom of Castile. The Guanches were finally subdued about 1495. Pop. in 1900, 358,564. The capital of the whole archipelago is Santa Cruz de Tenerife. The largest town is Las Palmas. The initial meridian of longitude was for a long time taken by certain countries from Hierro (Ferro), which was supposed to be exactly 20° W. of the meridian of Paris. Later surveys have established the fact that the position of the Ferro meridian was placed about 12 miles too far to the W.

Canterbury, kan'ter-bêr-e (anc. Durovernum or Darvernum; later L. Cantuar'ria; Anglo-Saxon, Cantuaraburh), a city and a parliamentary and county borough of England, is in the territorial limits of the co. of Kent, on the Stour, 53 miles ESE. of London. Lat. 51° 17' N.; lon. 1° 4' E. Its famous cathedral, erected between the eleventh and fifteenth centuries, on the site of the first Christian church built in Saxon England, is in the form of a double cross, with a central and two western towers, and presents a magnificent union of various styles of Gothic architecture. Its total length is 514 feet, with a height of the nave of 80 ft. and of the central tower of 235 ft. The choir is the largest and one of the finest in the kingdom, and the pavement of the chapel of the Holy Trinity is worn into hollows by the knees of the innumerable pilgrims who here worshipped at the shrine of Thomas à Becket. Part of the exterior of the building is embellished with numerous modern statues. Beneath the cathedral is a spacious crypt, used as a French Protestant church since the reign of Elizabeth. Attached to the edifice are cloisters, a fine chapter house, a deanery, and two libraries. Among the other churches, St. Martin's, a venerable structure, and St. Dunstan's are noteworthy. Canterbury has a grammar-school, founded by Henry VIII., a hospital for poor brethren, founded by Archbishop Lanfranc; Jesus Hospital, founded in 1595; guild-hall, and an art-gallery. A fine ancient gateway, some remains of St. Augustine's Abbey, of a Norman castle, and of the old Chequers Inn, immortalized by Chaucer, and Dane John (Dojon), an artificial mound, may be specified as objects of interest. The chief business of the town is trade in hops and grain. Canterbury was formerly noted for its silk-manufactures and for its damask linen. It sends 1 member to the House of Commons. Pop. in 1901, 24,899.

Canterbury existed before the Roman invasion; it was made an important military station by the Romans, and subsequently became the capital of the Saxon kingdom of Kent, under the name of Caer-Cant. The archbishopric was founded in 597. The most famous of the archbishops have been St. Augustine, the founder of the see, St. Dunstan, Stigand, Lanfranc, Anselm, Becket, Cardinal Pole, Crammer, Laud, and Tillotson. The archbishop of Canterbury is "primate of all England" and the first peer of the realm. He crowns the sovereign in Westminster Abbey, and among other privileges has that of conferring degrees in divinity, law, and physic.

Cantire (or Cantyre), Mull of. See KINTYRE.

Canton, kan-ton' (Chinese, Kwang-chow-fu or Sang-ching, the "provincial city"), a city of China, and the great commercial emporium of the province of Kwang-tung, on the left bank of the Canton or Pearl River (Chu-kiang), about 80 miles from its mouth in the China Sea. Lat. 23° 6' N.; lon. 113° 15' E. Pop. estimated at about 900,000. Canton, with its suburbs, occupies the N. bank of the river, extending inland nearly to a row of lofty heights commanding it on the N. and NE., between which and the city is a broken ravine; to the S. lies an alluvial plain, formed by the delta of the river. Opposite the city is the large island of Ho-nan. Canton is enclosed by a wall of brick, on a foundation of red sandstone, 6 or 7 miles in circumference, about 10 yards high and of great thickness, and entered by 12 gates; it is unequally divided, by another wall with 4 gates, into the old and the new town. The latter, between the old town and the river, is compactly built, while the old town covers a vast area and spreads northward into an endless, straggling village. In the old town are the residences of the high officials, the grand hall for the examination of candidates for literary honors, and the new mint. The new town is the business quarter. On the northern heights are several strong forts, and on some islands in the river are other forts, termed the "Dutch" and the "French Folly." Various detached batteries also guard the approach to the city by the river. The suburbs are nearly as large as the city itself. On the S. they stretch for miles along the river-side. In the southwestern suburbs are the hongs, formerly the European quarter. The artificial island of Sha-mien is the modern European quarter.

The city and the suburbs are laid out and built after one fashion. The streets are narrow and crooked, varying from 2 to 16 feet but averaging 7 or 8 feet in width, each closed by gates guarded at night, and each of the trading thoroughfares appropriated to one trade. The better class of houses are mostly of brick, but also of stone, with flat roofs and terraces, and the place of window-glass is commonly supplied by paper, mica, or thin shell. The residences of the wealthy inhabitants are richly furnished; those of the lower orders are ordinarily mud hovels. Upward of 120 temples are enumerated in Canton, the principal being the remarkable Buddhist temple on the island of Ho-nan. In the western part of the old city is a Mohammedan mosque, with a dome and minaret 160 feet in height. In the same section is a nine-story pagoda, dating from the beginning of the Middle Ages, and outside of the walls, on the N., is another lofty pagoda. Canton has several hospitals and many high schools and colleges. A conspicuous feature of the city is the number of halls used for guilds and associations. The French Catholic cathedral is a stately edifice. The manufactures are various and extensive, and the shops are filled with articles of Chinese workmanship. Silk-weaving and the manufacture of all kinds of cloth are the leading industries. Shoemaking is extensively carried on, and large numbers of persons work in wood, stone, iron, and brass. Among other manufactures are those of glass and lacquer-ware, and there are numerous sugar-mills. The book trade is considerable.

Until 1843, all the legitimate foreign trade of China was conducted at Canton, but the more recent opening of many Chinese ports to western commerce has greatly reduced the commercial importance of the city. The value of the port's combined import and export trade was in 1903 nearly 70,000,000 haikwan taels. The chief exports are tea, raw and manufactured silk, cassia, matting, palm-leaf fans, fire-crackers, sugar, chinaware, canes, and preserves. The foreign trade is mainly in the hands of the English. Large vessels cannot ascend to Canton, but have to unload at Whampoa, where there are extensive docks. The markets abound in all kinds of live-stock for food, including dogs, cats, owls, hawks, rats, etc., suitable only for Chinese consumers; but provisions of all kinds are generally abundant and cheap. Canton is well supplied with water from reservoirs and springs. The climate is more favorable to the health of Europeans than that of most large Oriental cities within the tropics. The upper range of the mercury is about the same as in New York. It occasionally descends to about the freezing-point. The city is wholly devoid of sanitary arrangements, and perhaps represents more moral degradation and squalor than any other city of the world. It has several times been swept by pestilence.

There are no wheeled carriages in use in the streets of Canton, but their absence is amply compensated for by the nimble sedan-bearers. The prodigious number of boats, largely used as dwellings, with which the river is crowded,—at times amounting to 100,000 or more,—strikes the eye with bewilderment. The inhabitants are called Tankia, or boat-people. The family-boats of the better sort are from 60 to 80 feet long and about 15 feet wide. Large numbers of poultry are reared on boats.

Canton is considered the oldest city in the S. of China. One of its earliest names, and one which is still used in its books, was Yang-ching, "the city of rams." In 1841 the river-defences and the hill-forts above Canton were captured by the British forces, who, however, did not enter the city, a truce having been forthwith agreed to upon the payment of £6,000,000 by the vanquished. In 1857 the French and English forces bombarded and occupied Canton. See CAN-TON RIVER.

Canton' River (Chinese, Chu-kiang, "Pearl River"), the main channel of the great Si-kiang and Pe-kiang delta, on the S. coast of China, forming the avenue of approach to Canton, which is about 80 miles from the open water of the South China Sea. The water-way at Canton, where it is very narrow and as crowded with shipping as the Thames at London, is deep enough for ships of 1000 tons' burden; but foreign ships (except steamers) come up only as far as Whampoa, about 9 miles to the SE. of Canton, loading and unloading by means of native boats. Vessels of deep draft lie outside of the bar. At about 40 miles below Canton the channel is called the Boea Tigris ("Mouth of the Tiger"), and widens there into a large estuary, termed the "Outer Waters," on the W. side of which is the island of Macao. Close to Canton and below it forms a multitude of islands, including Ho-nan, Whampoa, French, Dane, Junk, Ty-cooktow, An-ung-hoi, Chuen-pi, and Tiger Island, on which great quantities of rice are grown and numerous forts are placed. Capdenac, kâp'deh-nák', a town of France, department of Lot, 3 miles SE. of Figeac. Pop. about 1000.

Cap des Rosiers, kâp dá ro'zé-á', a post-village and parish of Gaspé co., Quebec, between Gaspé Bay and the St. Lawrence, 19 miles from Gaspé.

Cape. For the headlands and promontories that are ordinarily designated by the word Cape, see the notices under their own proper names, as AGULHAS, CAPE, HATTERAS, CAPE, etc. Towns and regional divisions will be found under Cape (CAPE COD, CAPE COLONY).

Cape Ann, a promontory forming the E. extremity of Essex co., Mass., on which are the towns and summer-resorts of Gloucester, Rockport, Annisquam, and Pigeon Cove. An excellent quality of granite is obtained here. See ANN, CAPE.

Cape Bald, a settlement of Westmoreland co., New Brunswick. Its banking point is Shediac. It has lobster-packing industries, etc.

Cape Breton, brit'ton or brét'ton, a county of Nova Scotia, on the island of Cape Breton, bounded on the S. and E. by the Atlantic Ocean. A large part of its area is covered with beds of coal. Capital, Sydney. Pop. about 42,000.

Cape Breton, an island at the eastern extremity of Nova Scotia, mostly between lat. 45° 36' and 47° 5' N. and lon. 60° and 61° 30' W. It is separated from the mainland by the narrow Gut of Canso. Extreme length from north to south, 100 miles; extreme breadth, 85 miles. Area, 3120 sq. m. The first settlement in Cape Breton (which was united under the same government with Nova Scotia in 1820) was made in 1712 by the French, who called the island Ile Royale, and who built the strong fortress of Louisbourg. In 1745 the British colonists in America, seconded by a British fleet, captured Louisbourg. By the treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle, in 1748, Cape Breton was restored to France, but in 1758 Louisbourg was again taken, and by the treaty of Paris, in 1763, Cape Breton was ceded to England. The island is very irregularly shaped and is greatly indented with bays. An inlet, called Bras d'Or, entering Cape Breton on the east, renders every part of its interior accessible by water; and a ship-canal, half a mile in length, from the Bras d'Or to St. Peter's Bay, now bisects the island. The two divisions thus created are in striking contrast, the northern portion being high, bold, and steep, while the south is low, intersected by numerous inlets, and diversified with moderate elevations. The northern division, at its termination in North Cape, rises to the height of 1800 feet. Bras d'Or Lake is about 50 miles in length and 20 miles in breadth; its depth of water varies from 12 to 60 fathoms, and it is very secure and navigable. (See BRAS D'OR.) The climate is not so rigorous as that on the adjoining continent. Corn and other grains are raised in limited quantities. Marble, granite, limestone, slate, gypsum, salt, and coal are found, the latter in abundance and of a superior quality. The coal deposits of Cape Breton occupy not less than 300 sq. m. and are continued under the sea. The yield of the Sydney district is over 2,000,000 tons per year, and the mines employ 5000 men. Short railways connect the coal-mines with the port of Sydney. There are also rich deposits of iron- and copper-ore. Cape Breton has long been celebrated for its fisheries, which employ about 10,000 men and yield an annual catch of about $1,500,000. The forests furnish large quantities of excellent ship-timber, and ship-building constitutes an important and lucrative industry.

Cape Breton is divided into 4 counties,—Richmond, Inverness, Victoria, and Cape Breton. Pop. in 1891, 86,794, mainly of Scottish Highland descent, and including about 15,000 French Acadians and 600 Micmac Indians; in 1901, 97,200. Chief town, Sydney. A headland on the east coast of the island is called Cape Breton. Lat. 45° 57' N.; lon. 59° 40' W.

Cape Cam'eroons' (or Camarones, kâ-mâ-ro'nés'), off the W. coast of equatorial Africa, is an island in the estuary of the Cameroons (Kamerun) River, near lat. 4° N., lon. 9° 40' E. It was named by the Portuguese from the vast quantity of shrimps (camarones) taken in the adjacent sea. See KAMERUN.

Cape Charles, etc. See CHARLES, etc.

Cape Charles, a banking post-town of Northampton co., Va., on the Chesapeake Bay and at the terminus of the New York, Philadelphia and Norfolk R., 32 miles N. by E. of Norfolk. It has oyster-, fishing- and canning-industries. Pop. in 1900, 1040.

Cape Coast Castle, or Cabo Corso, a town, and capital until 1876, of the Gold Coast colony, British west Africa, partly built on a low rocky cape. Lat. 5° 5' N.; lon. 1° 13' W. There are several forts and a light-house. Most of the native houses are very mean and filthy; but there are good public and other buildings. The town, which was acquired by the English from the Dutch in 1665, has a large trade in palm oil, etc. Pop. 11,614.

Cape Cod, Mass., is on the Atlantic coast and is nearly coextensive with Barnstable co. The term is usually applied to a long, narrow, L-shaped, sandy peninsula which extends between Nantucket Sound on the S. and Cape Cod Bay on the N., having a length, along its course, of about 65 miles, and a general width varying from 1 to 10 miles. It contains but scanty vegetation, although having extensive cranberry bogs. Cape Cod is much frequented as a summer-resort, and there are a number of attractive and quaint villages and settlements, such as Yarmouth, Barnstable, Truro, Hyannis, Harwich, Provincetown (on the extreme NW. point), Chatham (in the SE.), and Woods Hole or Holl (in the SW.), all of which are connected to one another and Boston by railroad. On its extremity, called Race Point, is a light, in lat. 42° 3' 40" N., lon. 70° 14' 48" W.

Cape Colony, officially called The Colony of the Cape of Good Hope, a colony of Great Britain, forming the southernmost part of the continent of Africa. It is bounded on the N. by German Southwest Africa, the Bechuanaland Protectorate, the Orange River Colony, Basutoland, and Natal. Its chief administrative divisions are Cape Colony proper (with which Griqualand West is now incorporated), East Griqualand, Pondoland (annexed in 1894), Tembuland, British Bechuanaland (incorporated with the colony in 1895), the Transkei, and Walfish Bay. Total area, 276,775 sq. m., of which 191,416 belong to Cape Colony proper. The population, according to the census of 1891, exclusive of Bechuanaland and Pondoland, was 1,527,224, of which 956,485 (336,938 white, 619,547 colored) dwelt in Cape Colony proper. The total population now (1905) is estimated to exceed 2,500,000. The surface of the southern half of the country and of the coast-border consists of lofty and rugged mountains, which rise, step-like, above one another, enclosing lofty plateaus and undulating plains. These mountain-ridges (Langkloof, Great Zwarte, Roggeveld, Nieuwveld, Stormberg, Drakenberg) conform to and in great measure determine the trend of the coast-line, and attain elevations of from 2000 to upward of 10,000 feet, the summits of the inner ranges being, as a rule, much the loftiest. The culminating points of subtropical South Africa, in the Drakenberg range, are on the border of Basuto Land and Natal, beyond the colonial boundary. Table Mountain and the Lion's Head, which rise almost directly above Cape Town, have elevations of 3550 and 2180 feet respectively. Other lofty summits are those of the Eland Mountains, 4890 ft.; Great Table Mountain, 4720 ft.; Sneeuwkop, of the Cedar Mountains, 6335 ft.; and Compass Mountain, of the Snow Mountains, assumed to be about 8000 ft. Between the second and third terraces in the S., and approximately between lats. 32° and 33° S., is the series of upland plateaus or great plains known as the Great Karroo, which retains a general elevation of about 4000 ft.,—a region of marked aridity and vegetable dearth during most of the year, but luxuriant in grass, flowers, and pastures during the three months of rain. Almost the only important river of Cape Colony is the Orange or Gariep, which forms a large part of the northern boundary and empties on the W. coast, constituting the division-line with the German territory. (See ORANGE RIVER.) Of minor importance is the Great Fish River which discharges in the SE.

The climate of Cape Colony is subtropical, with a comparatively moderate range of temperature. Along many parts of the coast the average temperature of the coldest month, about 60°, varies only about 10° from that of the hottest month (70°). Snow is of frequent occurrence on the higher mountains, and has even been known at rare intervals near the coast. The dry air of the Karroo region has been considered particularly beneficial to health. The rainfall varies from about 4 inches in the interior to 25–30 inches on the coast; at Durban (in Natal) the annual rainfall is 40 inches.

The flora of Cape Colony is extremely varied and interesting, with a distinct relationship in some parts to that of Australia. Among the more characteristic plants are the heaths, proteas, pelargonias, irises, lilies, and orchids. The acacia, associated with the thorny euphorbias and aloes, is the only tree of the Karroo region. There are extensive and dense tropical growths in the east, in which palms are prominent elements in the vegetation. Wheat, oats, barley, Kafir corn, mealies, rye, and oat-hay are extensively raised. Temperate and tropical fruits (peach, apple, apricot, pear, plum, fig, orange, and lemon) are largely cultivated, and there is also an important development of the vine. The fauna of the region, which formerly embraced most of the distinctive types of African animals south of the equator, has suffered great diminution during the last half century. The lion, elephant, hippopotamus, buffalo, and zebra are still met with in some parts, but the rhinoceros and giraffe appear to have entirely disappeared. Antelopes, jackals, hyenas, and monkeys are still numerous; the ostrich is undergoing domestication.

The mineral wealth of the colony is very important, good serviceable coal being found in various parts, and copper, lead, iron, zinc, and manganese successfully mined in several districts. The most valuable mineral resource, however, is the diamond, the exploitation of which is mainly carried on in the Kimberley district of Griqualand West. The annual product of the diamond-mines has been for a number of years upward of £4,000,000. The pastoral pursuits of the colony form an important source of its revenue, the excellent wool of the Cape sheep having furnished exports in the year 1899 valued at over £2,000,000. The number of ostriches on farms is probably over 150,000. There are about 2500 miles of railway in operation in the colony.

The white population of Cape Colony is mainly of British extraction. The descendants of the Boers, or Dutch settlers, in whom there is some admixture of French (Huguenot) blood, are known as Afrikaners. The native races are chiefly Hottentots, Bushmen, Kaffirs, Fingos, and Bechuanas, together with some 15,000 Malays.

The government of Cape Colony is vested in a governor, a ministry composed of 6 members, a legislative council of 23 members, elected for 7 years, and a House of Assembly of 95 members, elected for 5 years. Capital, Cape Town.

The Dutch began to settle in the region of the Cape of Good Hope in 1652. In 1795 the British seized the Dutch colony. They were compelled to relinquish it in 1802, but again took possession in 1806. The year 1836 witnessed the beginning of a great exodus of the Boers, who founded a republic in Natal (soon taken possession of by the British), the Transvaal Republic, and the Orange Free State. The war of 1899–1902 established British sovereignty in the regions occupied by the Boers.

Cape Comorin, etc. See COMORIN, etc.

Cape Cove, a post-village of Gaspé co., Quebec, on the Gulf of St. Lawrence, 9 miles from Percé.

Cape Cove, a village of Digby co., Nova Scotia, near Cape St. Mary, 18 miles from Yarmouth. Pop. about 150.

Cape Diamond, the extremity of a promontory at the confluence of the St. Charles with the St. Lawrence, rising abruptly 333 feet above the river. On this promontory stands the citadel of Quebec. On the W., and nearly on a level with the ramparts, are the Plains of Abraham, where, in 1759, the English, under Wolfe, gained a signal victory over the French, under Montcalm, in which engagement both commanders were slain.

Cape Elizabeth, a township (town) of Cumberland co., Me., is on the sea and on the Boston and Maine R., a short distance south of Portland. It formerly included South Portland. Pop. in 1900, 887. The cape, which gives name to the town, has light-houses.

Cape Eternity, an imposing promontory of the left bank of the Saguenay River, 39 miles from its mouth, and separated by Eternity Bay from Cape Trinity. It is well wooded and forms one of the most imposing points in the scenery of the Saguenay. Elevation, 1700 feet.

Cape Nome. See NOME.

Cape of Good Hope, or Cape Peak, a promontory of South Africa, on the S. extremity of Table Mountain, having False Bay on the E. and the Atlantic Ocean on the W., 30 miles S. of Cape Town, in lat. 34° 22' S, lon. 18° 29' E., and rising nearly 1900 feet above the sea. This cape, celebrated in the annals of navigation, was discovered about the year 1488 by the Portuguese navigator Bartholomew Dias, who, having encountered much bad weather in its neighborhood, is said to have given it the name of Cabo dos Tormentos (kâ'bo doos tor-mên-toes), or "Cape of Tempests." John II., King of Portugal, considering this point as the goal of that gradual circumnavigation of the African continent which had long engaged the attention of the Portuguese, gave it, instead, the title of Cabo de Boa Esperança (kâ'bo dá bo'á ê-pâ-rân-sá), or "Cape of Good Hope." In Nov., 1497, Vasco da Gama succeeded in doubling it, and was the first European who by this route reached India. See CAPE COLONY.

Cape Passaro, etc. See PASSARO, etc.

Cape Porpoise (por'pus), a post-village of York co., Me., on the Atlantic Ocean, 24 miles SSW. of Portland. The banking point is Kennebunk. Many of its inhabitants are employed in fisheries. Pop. about 500.

Cape River, of Nicaragua. See WANKS.

Caper'naum, an ancient city of Palestine, generally supposed to have been at the N. end of Lake Tiberias, at the place where the ruins of the old town of Tell-Hum are found. Some locate it a few miles further S., on the W. side of the lake, at Khan-minyah.

Cape Ro'zier, a post-village of Hancock co., Me., on Penobscot Bay, 12 miles ESE. of Belfast. Pop. about 200.

Caperton, a post-village of Fayette co., W.Va., 5 miles SE. of Fayetteville.

Cape Sabine, Alaska and Ellesmere Land. See SABINE, CAPE.

Cape Sable Island, the S. extremity of Nova Scotia. Lat. 43° 26' N.; lon. 65° 38' W. It has a powerful revolving light. The extreme southern point is Cape Sable. This island is not to be confounded with SABLE ISLAND.

Capestramo, kâ'pê-trâ'no, a town of Italy, province and 23 miles SE. of Aquila. Pop. about 5000.

Cape, The, an abbreviation for the CAPE of GOOD HOPE and also for CAPE COLONY.

Cape Tormentine, a post-station of Westmoreland co., New Brunswick, on the New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island R., 30 miles from Sackville, its banking point. Pop. about 100. It has canning-industries, etc.

Cape Town, a city of Africa, capital of Cape Colony, on Table Bay, and at the foot of Table Mountain, 39 miles N. of the Cape of Good Hope. Lat. (of the observatory) 33° 56' S.; lon. 18° 29' E. Its streets are well supplied with electric trams, and the town has a good water-supply, obtained from Table Mountain. The principal buildings and institutions are the houses of parliament (completed in 1886), government house, the new museum (opened in 1897), public library, the castle, Roman Catholic cathedral, several Mohammedan mosques, the South African College, an examining university (University of the Cape of Good Hope), botanical garden, observatory, theatre, etc. The town is the terminus of several railways, and has fine new docks and a breakwater nearly 4000 feet in length. An outer harbor has latterly been constructed. The city is an important port of call, but in foreign trade falls below Port Elizabeth. It is the seat of a Roman Catholic and an Anglican bishop, the latter of metropolitan rank. Cape Town has a climate with a mean annual temperature of 63°, corresponding to that of Nice and the Riviera generally. A maximum temperature of 100°-102° (January) is sometimes reached, with a minimum of about 34° in June or July. The yearly rainfall is about 25 inches. Pop. in 1875, 33,239; in 1891, 51,083, or, with suburbs, 83,718; in 1902, with suburbs (estimated), 167,000.

Cape Trafalgar, etc. See TRAFALGAR, etc.

Cape Traverse, a post-village and headland of Prince Edward Island, in Northumberland Strait, 33 miles W. by S. of Charlottetown. Pop. 250.

Cape Verde (verd; Fr. Cap Vert, kâp vair,—i.e., "green cape"), the westernmost cape of Africa, on the Atlantic Ocean, between the rivers Senegal and Gambia. Lat. 14° 43' N.; lon. 17° 34' W. Named from a group of enormous baobab-trees crowning its summit. On its point is the French town of Dakar.

Cape Verde Islands (Port. Ilhas Verdes, eel'yâs vên'dês,—i.e., "green islands"), a possession of Portugal, are situated in the Atlantic Ocean, 320 miles W. of Cape Verde (coast of Africa), between lat. 14° 45' and 17° 13' N. and lon. 22° 45' and 24° 30' W. The archipelago consists of the following islands: Sal, Boavista, Maio, Santiago (São Thiago), Fogo, Brava, Grande, São Nicolao, Santa Luzia, Branco, Razo, São Vicente (St. Vincent), and Santo Antonio (Santa Antão), with several smaller islets. Area, 1480 sq. m., of which about 425 belong to the island of Santiago. They are disposed in a southern or windward and a leeward group. They serve as a penal colony. The surface of the islands is in general mountainous, and some of their peaks have a considerable elevation. The volcano of Fogo is 8800 feet in height, and the Sugar-Loaf (Pão de Açúcar) of Santo Antonio, 8200 feet. These are the culminating points of the island group. The construction is largely volcanic, but ancient granites and gneisses point to a continental origin, and some of the islands, as Maio, have extensive sedimentary deposits. The soil is extremely varied, but on the whole infertile; the absence of trees and the scarcity of water are the causes of frequent and severe distress. Climate very hot, but tempered by the sea-breezes. The mean annual temperature is about 74°, with a maximum (in September) of 92°, and a minimum (in December) of 58°. A dry season covers the months from December to July. The mornings and evenings are cool and dews abundant. Chief products: fruits, maize, beans, coffee, sugar, tobacco, cotton, archil, cinchona, indigo, red coral, salt, and oil-nuts. Cattle are extensively reared, and dried and salted provisions form a considerable article of export. Goats and pigs are abundant. Asses and mules are the beasts of burden. Fowls (guinea-fowl, partridge, quail) are abundant in most of the islands; serpents are unknown; an indigenous mammalian fauna is almost entirely absent, but whales abound in the neighboring seas. Amber is found on all the coasts, which are frequented by turtles. The natives are quiet and docile, but extremely indolent. The Portuguese language is corrupted into a jargon called lingua creola. Agriculture and the preparation of salt are the chief branches of industry; linens, pottery-ware, soap, and leather are manufactured in some of the islands. These islands, together with the Portuguese possessions on the continent of Africa near Cape Roxo, are administered by a governor. The chief activity of the islands is concentrated at São Vicente, which has an excellent harbor with deep water at Porto Grande, the capital of the island group (replacing the late capital, Porto Praya or Villa da Praia). A coaling depot and supply-station for Atlantic steamers has been established here. Pop. in 1875, 90,704; in 1883, 107,024; in 1900, 147,424, most of whom are blacks. The islands were discovered by Cadamosto, a Portuguese navigator, in 1482, previous to which time they appear to have been uninhabited.

Caribbean (ká-rí-b-ee-an) Sea, that portion of the Atlantic Ocean lying between the Caribbees, or Leeward and Windward Islands, on the E., Central America and Yucatan on the W., the islands of Porto Rico, Haiti, and Cuba on the N., and Panama, Colombia, and Venezuela on the S. It communicates with the Gulf of Mexico by a passage, known as the Yucatan Channel, about 120 miles in width between Cape Catoche, in Yucatan, and Cape San Antonio, the most westerly point of Cuba. Its southern shores are generally high and rocky and contain some gulfs of considerable extent. Being but little encumbered with rocks or islands, its navigation is for the most part clear and open. Its chief arms or inlets are the Gulfs of Honduras, Darien, and Venezuela (with its prolongation, the Lake of Maracaibo). The main Gulf Stream is formed in the Caribbean basin, which receives the easterly Atlantic currents, and discharges the accumulating waters, with continuous flow, through the Yucatan Channel into the Gulf of Mexico. The deepest water is in the eastern half of the basin, where soundings of 17,000 feet and over have been obtained. Carpathian Mountains (Ger. Karpathen, kar-pá'ten; anc. Car'pates), a mountain-system of east-central Europe, forming part of the great Alpine uplift, and constituting the connecting arm between the Alps proper and the Balkans. They are largely constructed of lofty exposed granite masses, as in the central Tatra group, or of nuclear granites, gneisses, and schists overlaid by Jurassic, Cretaceous, and Tertiary deposits, mainly sandstones. The system contains no active volcanoes, but on its inner side, facing the Hungarian lowland, it is flanked by a number of subordinate and heterogeneous mountain-groups or chains, as the Mátra and the famous wine-growing heights of Tokay-Speries (Hegyalja), which are of volcanic origin. The Carpathians in their main contour form a vast crescentic mountain-bulwark, which begins at Pressburg, on the Danube, encircles the greater part of the central Hungarian basin, and terminates at Orsova, on the Rumanian frontier. In this sweep the mountain-system has a length of nearly 800 miles, varying in width from less than 10 miles to upward of 200 miles, as is seen in the Transylvanian expansion. The chief divisions of the system, beginning at the W., are: the Little Carpathians (with elevations nowhere exceeding 3000 feet), the White Mountains, Beskids, the Central Carpathians or High Tatra (with the Gerladorfer or Franz Josef Spitze, the culminating point of the entire system, 8737 ft.; Lomnitzer Spitze, 8642 ft.; Eisthaler Spitze, 8630 ft.; Tatra Spitze, 8415 ft.; Meeräugen Spitze, the "Rigi of the Carpathians," commanding a magnificent panorama, 8210 ft.), the Eastern Carpathians (comprised between the valleys of the Poprád and Bistritza), and the Transylvanian Alps, the last-named forming the SE. and S. boundaries of Transylvania, and having a number of summits which rival those of the High Tatra (Negoi, in the Fogaras group, 8347 ft.; Bucoasa, 8230 ft.; Caraiman, 8186 ft.; Buksoi, 7897 ft.; Königstein, 7352 ft.).

The Carpathians form the water-parting between the basins of the Baltic and Black Seas. They abound in grand and rugged scenery, descending with marked abruptness more particularly on their outer face (Galicia, Rumania), and presenting a number of singularly narrow parting-ridges or arêtes (the Polnischer Kamm, in the High Tatra, 7244 ft.). The mountains, except on the Moldavian frontier, nowhere reach or pass much beyond the snow-line, but fields of snow are to be found in secluded gorges and cirques at all times of the year. Evidence of past glacial action are abundant throughout the region, but there are no existing glaciers in the entire system. One of the distinctive features of the Central Carpathians is the abundance of small glacial lakes or tarns (the Meeräugen, "eyes of the sea;" Hun-tengeresem), which are hidden away amidst the barren crags, in places occupying positions of 6000 ft. elevation and over (the Gefrörner See, near the Polnischer Kamm, 6715 ft.).

The Carpathians are largely a region of rich vegetable growth, with magnificent woods and forests of evergreens, oaks, and beeches covering the slopes to elevations of 3000-4500 ft., with a scattering of dwarfed arboreal elements on many of the higher and almost inaccessible crags. A number of wild animals, such as the wolf, bear, and lynx, still inhabit the inner fastnesses, and the chamois and ibex are found sparingly in some parts. The lammereiger, or bearded vulture, is a part of the bird fauna. The population of the Carpathians is composed chiefly of Magyars, Slovaks, Germans, Ruthenians, and Rumanians. There are no high passes in the Carpathians, those best known being the Yablunka Pass, on the railroad connecting Budapest with Breslau, 1805 ft.; the Tarnow (or Poprád) Pass, 2636 ft.; the Verecke

Pass, on the route from Munkács to Lemberg; and the famous Roterturm Pass, across the Southern Transylvanian Alps, 1198 ft. The Carpathians contain more mineral wealth (gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, salt, coal, etc.) than any other mountain-system of Europe. The Hungarian Ore Mountains, near Schemnitz, are particularly rich. Tatra-Füred or Schmeek, in the High Tatra, and Hercules-Füred (baths of Mehadia), not far from the frontiers of Rumania and Servia, are celebrated and fashionable watering-places.

Cartagena, kar-taj-jee'na, or Carthage (Sp. pron. kaa-tá-há'ná; anc. Carthago No'va, or "New Carthage"), a city, seat of a captain-general, and great naval arsenal of Spain, on a noble bay of the Mediterranean, province and 27 miles SSE. of Murcia. Lat. 37° 36' N.; lon. 0° 56' W. Pop. in 1897, with suburbs, 86,245; in 1901, 103,373. It occupies the declivity of a hill and a small plain extending to the harbor, which is, after that of Vigo, the largest of the country. It is protected from winds by surrounding heights and is strongly fortified. The city, though dull, is well built and has some fine promenades. There is a school of navigation. Ship-building is carried on and there are manufactures of canvas and cordage, smelting-works, and esparto-weaving establishments. The copper-, lead-, zinc- and iron-mines of Cartagena were originally worked by the Carthaginians. The lead-, iron- and manganese-mines give employment to a large number of men in the neighboring La Unión. The exports include esparto-grass, oranges, and the various ores from the different mines. The climate is pleasantly mild, but marred at times in winter by the mistral. Mean temperature of the year, 65.5°. The town is the seat of a bishop. Cartagena was a colony of Carthage. It was taken by Scipio in 210 a.c., at which period, according to Livy, it was one of the richest cities in the world. It was ruined by the Goths; and its modern importance dates only from the time of Philip II.

Cartagena, or Carthage, formerly Cartagena de las Indias, a city and seaport of Colombia, capital of the department of Bolívar, on a small sandy peninsula connected with the continent by an artificial neck of land. Lat. 10° 25' N.; lon. 75° 34' W. On an island, communicating with the city by means of bridges, is the suburb Ximani, which is inhabited chiefly by Indians. Both the former and the latter are surrounded by walls of freestone, which are a part of the vast fortifications which were formerly thought necessary to protect the town. The bay, which is landlocked and has smooth water, extends from N. to S. 7 miles and affords excellent anchorage, the harbor being one of the best on the northern coast of the continent. Of the two entrances to the port—the Boca Grande, close to the town, and the Boca Chica, many miles to the S.—the Boca Chica is now alone available for the larger craft.

The town and suburbs are well laid out. Among the public buildings are churches and convents, a general and a military hospital, a town-hall, a theatre, a circus, and a college. The climate is excessively hot and insubrious. Leprosy is common and yellow fever often makes fearful ravages. The trade of Cartagena, at one time considerable, has declined very much in consequence of the rivalry of the ports of Santa Marta, Sabánilla, and Barranquilla. The restoration of communication with the Magdalena River by means of the Dique Canal has to an extent revived the importance of Cartagena, which has a fair export trade in cotton, sugar, hides, ivory-nuts, tobacco, coffee, and cacao. Cartagena was the first city in this part of South America to declare (1811) independence from Spain. Pop., with suburbs, about 18,000.

The Cascade Range is about 110 miles distant from the Pacific Ocean in Oregon, and from 120 to 160 miles in Washington. It is largely composed of lava-masses, and the highest summits are volcanic cones, most of them active at a late geological period. The eastern face of the mountains falls off into a measurably dry or even arid region of plateau and desert; on the W. the descent is into a tract of abundant rainfall and luxuriant vegetable growth. The Cascade Range, especially on its western face, is extensively covered with forests of magnificent timber, including the fir and pine. The Columbia River passes through the range (near its middle) by a series of rapids and cascades at The Dalles, the turbulent waters at this point giving the name to the mountain-system, which is also traversed by two of the transcontinental lines of railroad (the Northern Pacific and the Great Northern). The Cascade Tunnel, on the line of the Great Northern R., has a length of 3 miles, and is bored through at an elevation of about 3400 feet. The loftiest summits of the range, many of which rise into perpetual snow and bear glaciers of greater or less extent, are Rainier or Tacoma, 14,526 feet; Adams, 12,470 ft.; Baker, 10,827 ft.; St. Helens, 9750 ft.; Hood, 11,225 ft.; Jefferson, 10,200 ft.; Pitt, 9760 ft.; and Scott, 9123 ft. The first four of these summits are in Washington, the remainder in Oregon. The beautiful Crater Lake, occupying the position of a subsided volcanic cone, and with a greatest diameter of about 6 miles, lies in the Cascade Mountains of Oregon, at an elevation of 6240 ft.

Cascades, a post-village (formerly capital) of Skamania co., Wash., is on the N. bank of the Columbia River, about 160 miles from its mouth. Here are falls or rapids which obstruct the navigation of the river, which is contracted into a channel about 200 feet wide.

Caspian (ká'spé-an) Sea (anc. Ma're Caspium or Ma're Hyrcanum; Gr. Kaspiá Θάλασσα), a large inland sea or salt lake, lying between Europe and Asia. It lies approximately between lat. 36° 40' and 46° 50' N. and lon. 47° 10' and 54° 50' E. It is the largest interior body of water in the world, and measures approximately 730 miles in greatest length and 330 miles in extreme width; its narrowest part, opposite Cape Apsheron, measures 140 miles. Its area is estimated to be 170,000 sq. m., with a drainage-basin in Europe alone of 800,000 sq. m. The sea lies mostly in Russian territory, having Russia and Persia on the W., Russia on the N., the Transcasian Province on the E., and Persia on the S. The present sea is part of a former vast oceanic water which at one time extended continuously to the Arctic Ocean, and united seemingly (by way of the Manych and Kuma depression) with the Black Sea in the W. In a more recent period the Caspian and Aral waters constituted a distinct Aralo-Caspian Sea, the traces of the parts no longer existing being evidenced in high-level terraces (beaches), 150-350 feet in elevation, which surround part of the Caspian shore-line, and in the deposits of fossil shells, of the Caspian type, which are scattered broadly over the Post-Pliocene Karakum sands eastward as far as the meridian of Merv. The Ussol depression seems to represent the final channel of communication existing between the two seas, which were ultimately made distinct by the uplift of the Ust-Urt plateau.

The present surface of the Caspian is depressed about 83-85 feet below sea-level. The water is very shallow in much of the northern half of the sea; but southward, towards Cape Apheron, the depth increases, and soundings have been made of 2000 and 2600 feet. In the southern half of the basin the general depth is much greater, the deepest sounding recording 3190 feet. The sea has no outlet, its waters being removed by evaporation alone. The salinity of the water generally is less than that of the free ocean, but in the land-locked gulf of Kara-Boghas, on the eastern side, the degree of salinity is very high. There are no appreciable tides. The chief tributaries of the Caspian are received on the N. and W.,—the Ural, Volga, Terek, Kur, and Aras, besides numerous smaller streams. No streams of volume are contributed by the sandy wastes of the E., and on the S. the basin is closely circumscribed by the Elbrus Mountains, the only considerable tributaries at this end of the sea being the Seld-Rud and the Atrak. Communication between the Caspian and the Black, Baltic, and White seas has been established by means of the different canals that have been joined to the Volga. The supposition that the Oxus (Amu-Darya) at one time discharged into the Caspian has been disproved by recent explorations.

The animal life of the Caspian Sea is a deficient one, although fishes are very abundant. The sturgeon and sterlet are caught in great numbers; and there are also salmon, perch, cat-fish, and carp. The seal and porpoise represent the mammalian fauna, both, possibly, remnants of the Arctic fauna which belonged to the Asiatic Mediterranean. The chief fishery for sturgeon is at and near Astrakhan, and gives employment to many thousand persons. The making of caviare and of isinglass are an important branch of the sturgeon-fishing industry.

Many lines of steamers navigate the Caspian waters, calling at the chief ports, which are: Astrakhan (in the estuary of the Volga), Guriav (at the mouth of the Ural), Baku, Derbend, Petrovsk, Lenkoran, Mikhailovsk, Krasnovodsk, and Tokikishlar, in Russian territory; and Astrabad, Meshhed-i-Ser (port of Balfurush), and Eneoli (port of Reht), in Persia. The Russian Caspian flotilla has its naval station at Ashur-ade.

Cassel, or Kassel, kas'sel (anc. Castellum Catto'rum), a city of Prussia, capital of the province of Hesse-Nassau and of the administrative district of Cassel, situated on both banks of the Fulda, 91 miles NNE. of Frankfurt-on-the-Main. It consists of the Altstadt or Old Town, the Oberneustadt or Upper New Town, laid out two centuries ago by French Huguenots, the Unterneustadt or Lower New Town, the new quarter called Hohenzollern, and the recently annexed Wehlheiden. The Lower New Town is the only section on the right bank of the river, which has recently been converted into a navigable waterway. Cassel is one of the handsomest towns of its size in Germany, the architectural and sculptural adornments of former ages being richly supplemented by the works of recent art. Few places can show a greater profusion of statues and other public monuments. The newer sections have spacious squares and broad and stately streets.

In the Upper New Town is the Friedrichsplatz, on which stands the former electoral palace, an indifferent structure, and near it is the museum, the so-called Fridericianum, a handsome edifice, which contains a library of about 180,000 volumes and rich collections of art, antiquities, and other objects. One of the public squares, the Königsplatz, is remarkable for its six-fold echo. On an open space called the Schöne Aussicht ("fine view"), in the southern part of the city, is the new picture-gallery, a beautiful Renaissance building.

Among the churches of Cassel (most of which are Protestant) are several fine and interesting structures, some of them but recently completed. In addition to the library in the Fridericianum, there is a municipal library, founded in 1863 by the brothers Murhard, and containing over 100,000 volumes. Appended to it are a valuable picture-gallery and various collections. At the southern end of the town are the beautiful public gardens, called the Aue or Karlssue. The multifarious industries of Cassel include the manufacture of machinery, locomotives and cars, mathematical and physical instruments, and textiles. About 3 miles W. of the city are the famous castle and park of Wilhelmshöhe, on the steep slopes of the Habichtswald ("Hawk Forest"). The artificial cascades and other water-works of Wilhelmshöhe are on an extraordinary scale. It was here that Napoleon III. was confined after the surrender at Sedan. Cassel was the capital of Hesse-Cassel (Electoral Hesse) until 1866, when that state was absorbed by Prussia. Pop. in 1875, 53,043; in 1890, 72,461; in 1900 (after the annexation of Wehlheiden), 106,001.

Cassiquiare, kás-se-ko-á-rá, or Cassiquiari, kás-se-ko-á-ree, a deep river of Venezuela, forming the S. bifurcation of the Orinoco, by which that river has navigable communication with the Rio Negro. It leaves the Orinoco (below Emeralda) in lat. 3° 10' N., lon. 66° 20' W., and, after a tortuous SW. course of 240 miles, falls into the Rio Negro above San Carlos. By means of this river communication is established over an immense tract of South America, it being practicable to sail from the interior of Brazil to the sea through the Amazon, Rio Negro, Cassiquiare, and Orinoco. Where it leaves the Orinoco, at an elevation of 900 feet above the sea, the Cassiquiare has a width of about 950 feet. So low is the water-parting of the region that at times the course of flow is directed from the Rio Negro into the Orinoco.

Castile, kás-teel' (Sp. Castilla, kás-teel' yá, —i.e., a castle), a former kingdom of Spain, occupying the great central tableland of the peninsula, much of which has an average elevation of about 2500 feet, and which represents two or more sedimented lacustrine basins of vast extent. This vast plateau region, —with intensely hot summers and rigid winters, —large stretches of which consist of treeless plains, partly cultivable or affording pasture, partly sterile, is traversed or bordered by a number of mountain-ranges reaching elevations of 6000 to 8000 feet. The loftiest mountains are the Sierra de Gredos (Plaza de Almanzor, 8730 feet) and the Sierra de Guadarama (Pico de Peñalara, 8100 feet). Castile consists of Old Castile in the N. and New Castile in the S. Old Castile belongs in great part to the basin of the Douro (Duero), and New Castile to the basins of the Tagus and Guadiana. Old Castile (area, 25,360 sq. m.; pop. in 1897, 1,761,440) comprises the modern provinces of Ávila, Burgos, Logroño, Palencia, Santander, Segovia, Soria, and Valladolid. New Castile (area, 27,850 sq. m.; pop. in 1897, 1,853,314) is divided into the provinces of Ciudad Real, Cuenca, Guadalajara, Madrid, and Toledo. In the tenth century a part of this region was a county, of which Burgo was the capital; early in the eleventh century Castile was erected into a kingdom and soon united with the kingdom of Leon. The conquest of the Moorish kingdom of Toledo, in 1085, brought a great accession to the Castilian realm. New Castile. Toledo became the capital of the Castilian monarchs, Valladolid being also at times the royal residence. The marriage of Ferdinand of Aragon with Isabella of Castile, in 1469, united these two kingdoms in 1479, and the conquest of Granada, in 1492, brought what remained of Moorish Spain under Christian rule. From the great importance of Castile as the centre of the kingdom, the name of CASTILIAN is often used to indicate Spaniards in general.

Area, about 12,400 sq. m. Pop. in 1897, 1,942,245. It is divided into the provinces of Barcelona, Tarragona, Lérida, and Gerona. Capital, Barcelona. It is extremely mountainous, being intersected by outcrops of the Pyrenees, which separate it into numerous small valleys. Puigmal, on the borders of France, with its highest point in French territory, has an elevation of 9545 feet. Rising as isolated or "insular" summits are the remarkable buttressed Montserrat (4060 ft.), the Montseny (5690 ft.), and the Montagut (3125 ft.). The higher mountains of Catalonia are for most of the year covered with snow; the lower hills are well wooded. The valleys are verdant and generally watered by rivulets. The coast, about 200 miles in extent, is bold and rugged. Chief rivers, the Ebro, Llobregat, Ter, and Segre, the last an important tributary of the Ebro. There is much artificial irrigation. This is the best cultivated portion of Spain, every variety of cereal being raised. Among its mineral riches are copper, zinc, manganese, lead, and coal; there are salt-works on the coast, and at Cardona there is a mountain of rock-salt. The manufacturing industry of Catalonia (cottons, woollens, silks, laces, etc.) is the most important in the kingdom. The Catalan language is intermediate between the Provençal and the Castilian and has a literature of its own.

Catalonia took its name from two of the barbarous nations by whom it was overrun at the time of the downfall of the Roman Empire, the Goths and Alani (Gothalania). After having been long under the rule of independent counts, it was united with Aragon in the twelfth century.

Catania, kâ-tâ-ne-â (anc. Cat'ana or Cat'ina), a town of Sicily, on its E. coast, 31 miles NNW. of Syracuse. It is the capital of the province of the same name. Lat. of the observatory, 37° 30' 13" N.; lon. 15° 4' 45" E. It is beautifully situated at the foot of Etna, in a fruitful district.

The city has a noble appearance from the sea, and is internally very handsome, with regular and spacious streets paved with lava. Of this material also many of the principal buildings are constructed, being faced with magnesian limestone and enriched with marbles. Among the interesting edifices are the cathedral, partly dating from Norman times, the church of San Carcere, and other churches, and the former Benedictine monastery of San Nicola, which was one of the most extensive in Europe. The superb convent church has a famous organ. In a fine square near the cathedral is a lava statue representing an elephant bearing an obelisk, believed to be a genuine antique. Among the attractions of the town are the Bellini gardens, and among its sculptural adornments is a statue of the composer. Catania has a university, founded in the fifteenth century. It is the seat of an archbishop. It has extensive manufactures of silk and other fabrics, and of wares of lava and amber, besides which goods it exports grain, fruits, sulphur, raw silk, wine, soda, manna, cantharides, and snow from Mount Etna. The harbor is not adequate to the importance of the city, but it is generally full of small craft. It is small, and during a strong sirocco no ship can enter, although a costly breakwater has been constructed. The town is a winter-resort, the average temperature of the winter being about 53°. Its fisheries are extensive.

Catania was one of the most flourishing of the ancient Greek cities of Sicily. It was an important place under the Romans, who adorned it with edifices of great magnificence, most of which, however, have been destroyed by earthquakes and by lava. The ruins of the vast amphitheatre are still to be seen, as are also the remains of the theatre, baths, aqueducts, sepulchral chambers, hippodrome, and several temples. Hardly another place on the globe has suffered so much from volcanic eruptions and earthquakes as Catania. In 1693 it was almost entirely destroyed by an earthquake, and it has been repeatedly visited since. Pop. (commune) in 1901, 149,694; of the city, 133,035.

Catskill, a banking post-village and summer-resort, capital of Greene co., N.Y., is pleasantly situated on the W. bank of the Hudson River, at the mouth of Catskill Creek, 34 miles below Albany. It is on the West Shore and the Catskill Mountain and Cairo Rr. It has knitting-mills, sash-, blind- and chair-factories, manufactures of spray-pumps, patent medicines, etc., stone-yards and ice-houses. Pop. in 1900, 5484; of the township (town), which also contains Palenville, 8566. See CATSKILL STATION.

Catskill Creek, N.Y., a picturesque stream, which drains part of Albany co., runs southeastward through Greene co., and enters the Hudson River at Catskill. It is about 50 miles long.

Catskill Mountains (the Indian Osti Ora, "Mountains of the Sky"), a portion of the Appalachian system in the state of New York, principally in Greene co., but extending into the NW. part of Ulster co. They are the NE. abutment of the Alleghany Plateau, the summits being tabular reliefs of an eroded land-surface, and fall off abruptly on their eastern face, with a gentle decline westward. The descent into the valley of the Hudson, which river the mountains approach to within about 8 miles, is exceedingly abrupt, and characterized by a cliff escarpment of 1500-3000 feet elevation. The region covers an area of approximately 500 sq. m., and is drained eastward by the Esopus, Kaaterskill, Catskill, and other creeks into the Hudson River, southwestward by the East Branch into the Delaware River, and northward by the Schoharie Creek into the Mohawk River. It abounds in striking scenery, the dominant features of which are the beautifully-wooded summits, the deep gorges or "cloves" (Stony Clove, Plattekill, Deep Notch), and a number of high cascades (Kaaterskill Falls, 180 and 80 ft. in height; Haines's Falls, 150 and 80 ft.). The view eastward from South (or Pine Orchard) Mountain, at an elevation of 2225 ft. (to which access is now had by mountain railroad), is one of the grandest in the eastern United States. The Catskill Mountains, through their fine scenery, bracing atmosphere, and easy accessibility, have become one of the most popular summer-resorts of the country. The principal summits are Slide Mountain (Ulster co.), 4205 ft.; Hunter Mountain, 4025 ft.; Black Dome, 3990 ft.; Big West-Kill Mountain, 3896 ft.; Peak o' Moose, 3875 ft.; Panther Mountain, 3828 ft.; High Peak, 3664 ft.; Indian Head, 3585 ft.; Round Top, 3470 ft.; North Mountain, 3440 ft.; Overlook Mountain, 3150 ft.; and South Mountain, 2497 ft. The mountains are composed chiefly of Devonian and lower Carboniferous rocks.

Catskill Station, a post-hamlet of Columbia co., N.Y., on the Hudson River, opposite Catskill, and on the New York Central and Hudson River R., 33 miles S. of Albany and 109 miles N. of New York city.

Cat Spring, a post-hamlet of Austin co., Tex., 15 miles NE. of Alletton.

Cat'taraugus, a county in the W. part of New York, has an area of 1380 sq. m. It is intersected by the Alleghany River, is bounded on the N. by Cattaraugus Creek, and also drained by the Conewango and Ischua Creeks. Capital, Little Valley. Pop. in 1890, 60,866; in 1900, 65,643.

Cattaraugus, a banking post-village of Cattaraugus co., N.Y., on the Erie R., 31 miles ESE. of Dunkirk. It has manufactures of edge-tools, a tannery, etc. Pop. in 1900, 1382.

Cattaraugus Creek, N.Y., forms the boundary between Cattaraugus and Erie cos. and enters Lake Erie at the N. extremity of Chautauqua co., about 12 miles NE. of Dunkirk. It is nearly 70 miles long.

Cattaro, kát'tá-ro (Slavic, Kotor), a seaport of Austria-Hungary, in Dalmatia, at the SE. extremity of the Gulf of Cattaro, 38 miles SE. of Ragusa. It is situated at the foot of steep limestone rocks, the imposing buttresses of the Montenegrin mountains, and is strongly fortified. Its spacious harbor is one of the most picturesque in Europe. As a seaport, Cattaro has some importance as the commercial outlet of Montenegro. It has interesting old churches, including a Roman Catholic cathedral. Cattaro stands on the site of the Roman Acrium. In the Middle Ages it constituted a little republic, and in modern times it belonged to Venice down to the extinction of that state whose centuries of dominion are reflected in the architecture of the town. Pop. (commune) in 1900, 5693.

Cattaro, Gulf of, or Bocche di Cattaro, bok'ká de kát'tá-ro ("mouths of Cattaro"), a tortuous inlet of the Adriatic, at the S. extremity of the coast of Dalmatia, 30 miles in length, consisting of 3 basins connected by straits. It is the best harbor in the Adriatic. See CATTARO.

Cattegat, or Kattegat, kát'te-gat', a large arm of the North Sea, has Sweden on the E. and Jutland on the W., unites with the Skagerrak on the N., and communicates by the Sound and the Great and Little Belts with the Baltic on the S. Its length from N. to S. is about 160 miles, and its central breadth nearly 90 miles. It is of very unequal depth, and is not only shallow towards its shores, but also has sandbanks which are dangerous to navigation. In it are the islands of Læsø, Anholt, and Samsø.

Catterick, the supposed ancient Cataractonum, a village of England, co. of York, North Riding, on the Swale, 5 miles SE. of Richmond.

Cattolica, kát-to'l'e-ká, a town of Sicily, 14 miles NW. of Girgenti. It has sulphur-mines. Pop. (commune) in 1901, 8067.

Cattolica, or La Cattolica, a village of Italy, province of Forlì, 9 miles SE. of Rimini, near the Adriatic. It was named from the Athanasian bishops having retreated thither from the Arian council of Rimini in 380.

Catubig, ká-too-beeg', a town of Samar, Philippine Islands, near the N. coast. It exports abaca fabrics to Manila. Pop. 9565.

Caturigæ, the ancient name of CROAZIA.

Catus, ká'túce', a town of France, department of Lot, 9 miles NW. of Cahors. Pop. about 1000.

Caub, kôwb, a town of Prussia, in Hesse-Nassau, circle of Saankt Goarshausen, on the Rhine, 10 miles by rail below Bingen. It has an extensive trade in roofing-slate. Opposite the town, on a rock in the Rhine, is the imposing many-towered old castle of Pfalzgrafenstein (often called simply Pfalz,—i.e., "palace"), which belonged to the Palatinate. The strong castle of Gutenfels, which for many centuries towered above Caub and was at last destroyed during the Napoleonic wars, has recently been rebuilt. Pop. about 2000.

Cauca, kôw'ká, a river of Colombia, rises in that part of the Andes called Páramo de las Papas, SE. of Popayán, and, after a course of about 650 miles from S. to N. between the central and west Cordilleras of the Andes, falls into the Magdalena at Tacaloa, in lat. 9° 25' N. It is navigable in various portions of its course, and continuously between Popayán and Cali. The valley of the Cauca is one of the richest, most fertile, and most populous districts in South America.

Cauca, the largest department of Colombia. It occupies part of the S. portion and a strip along the entire W. (the Pacific) coast, touching the Caribbean Sea in the N. at the Gulf of Darien. Area, inclusive of the region or territory of Caquetá, about 240,000 sq. m. Pop. estimated in 1896, 650,000. It is mountainous in the W. portion, and is watered by the Atrato and upper Cauca Rivers; the SE. part is a vast plain, watered by affluents of the Amazon; the S. portion is mountainous. Cauca has extensive forests and rich mines of gold and silver, besides deposits of platinum, copper, iron, salt, chalk, slate, emeralds, marble, and other valuable minerals, and mineral springs; and it produces rubber, hides, coffee, tobacco, cacao, cinchona, etc. Capital, Popayán.

Caucasus, kaw'ká-süs, or Cauca'sia, a general government of the Russian Empire, comprising the whole of the region between the Black Sea and the Caspian, and traversed throughout its breadth (from NW. to SE.) by the Caucasus Mountains. Area, 182,500 sq. m. Pop. in 1897, 9,248,695. It embraces Georgia (Grusia), Circassia, Mingrelia, Daghestan, Shirvan, Abkhazia, parts of Armenia (wrested from Persia and Turkey), etc. Its official divisions (governments, provinces, etc.) are Kuban, Stavropol, Terek, Daghestan, Kutais, Tiflis, Baku, Kars, Erivan, Yelizavetpol, and the Black Sea Territory. Kuban, Stavropol, and Terek constitute Ciscaucasia (Caucasia "on this side,"—that is, N. of the Caucasus), and the rest, Transcaucasia (Daghestan, however, lying on the N. side of the mountains). The capital is Tiflis. Other important towns are Baku, Yekaterinodar, Vladikavkaz, Stavropol, Yelizavetpol, Derbend, Erivan, Kars, Poti, and Batum. Causasia presents an extraordinary medley of races and languages. The chief constituents of the population are Russians, Turks, and Tartars; Georgians (Grasians, Ineritians, Mingrelians, etc.) and the mountain tribes of the Lezgians; Tchetchenises, Tocherkesses (Circassians), and Abkhazians; Armenians, Ossetes, and Kurds; Greeks, Jews, and Germans. Most of this region was annexed or subjugated by Russia between 1801 and 1878. The bulk of the Circassians, after their heroic struggle, emigrated to Turkish territory.

Caucasus (Gr. Kaúkasos), a lofty range of mountains in Russia, the main chain of which stretches from the Taman peninsula, in the Black Sea, to the peninsula of Apsheron, in the Caspian, or over a linear extent of 750 miles, and forms what is generally accepted by geographers to be the boundary between Europe (at its SE. corner) and Asia (the depression of the Manych being by others considered to be the dividing line). The trend of the system is uniformly NW. and SE., but lateral offshoots are given off on the northern face trending northward, while on the S. a series of ramifications unite with the mountain-masses of Georgia (as a passageway to the highlands of Armenia) and constitute what is frequently designated the Little Caucasus. The two systems are separated by the depression or valley of the Kur. The main Caucasus is continued westward by the mountain-range of the Crimea, being broken by the Strait of Kerch (Yenikale), and eastward, beyond the Caspian, into the heights of the Transcaspian Province, nearly or quite to the valley of the Murghab. While the absolute relationship of the system has not yet been ascertained, it is almost certain that it forms part of the great Alpine uplift, and is, perhaps, to be looked upon as the orographic extension of the Balkan Mountains.

The main Caucasus is constructed fundamentally, or in its nuclear parts, of granite and ancient crystalline schists, overlaid by sedimentary limestones and sandstones of Jurassic, Cretaceous, and older Tertiary age. Some of the loftiest summits, as the Elbrus and Kasbek, are volcanic, but there are no active volcanoes in the system, although thermal springs are exceedingly abundant and earthquakes frequently destructive. The descent on the southern slopes is markedly abrupt, and much more gradual northward in the direction of the steppe-foreland of the Terek. The Caucasus is nearly equally divided by a deep cleft or defile, the Dariel Pass (Krestovaya Gora), into an eastern and western section, the summits of the eastern section being considerably inferior to those of the western. At the position of this pass, which marks the passage of the only carriage-road across the high chain, and the military road connecting Vladikavkaz with Tiflis, the width of the mountains between the northern and southern plains is only 60 miles. The Caucasus rises far above the snow-line, and many of the summits are buried beneath a heavy cap of snow and ice, and give origin to large glaciers. One of the largest of these is the Devdorak glacier, descending to 7500 feet above sea-level. The Besingi glacier, in the Central Caucasus, descends to 6500 ft., and others fall still lower. The height of the snow-line is, in the western section, approximately 9800 ft., and in the E., 12,200 ft. There are no lakes of any extent in the region, and the scenery, while grand and most imposing, is therefore destitute of one of the magnificent features of the Alps of Switzerland.

The climate of the Caucasus, which occupies nearly the latitudinal position of the Pyrenees, is markedly contrasted on the northern and southern faces, and the vegetation of the two sides is also largely opposed, that of the N. being sparse or lacking in luxuriance. Magnificent forests clothe much of the southern aspect, ranging high up the mountain-slopes, and in the middle reaches many of the central European fruits are cultivated; in the still lower tracts are found the fig, chestnut, pomegranate, almond, and saffron. The wild animals of the region comprise the wolf, jackal, bear, fox, European bison (in limited numbers), ibex, and chamois; the leopard and tiger are also found in parts of the Asiatic side. The mineral wealth is chiefly constituted by deposits of iron, copper, manganese, lead, silver, coal, sulphur, rock-salt, and naphtha. Gold occurs sparingly. The Caucasus has been celebrated for the martial spirit of its sturdy mountaineers, who have struggled heroically against their Russian conquerors. For the different races or tribes of people inhabiting the region, see the preceding article, CAUCASUS (CAUCASIA).

The important rivers having their sources in the Caucasus are the Kuban and Terek on the N., and the Kur on the S. The Aras, or Araxes, delimits in part the Little Caucasus on the S. The chief summits of the main range are Elbrus (on the Russian side of the main axis), 18,470 ft.; Dykh-tau, 17,052 ft.; Shkara, 17,038 ft.; Yanga; Koshtantau, 16,880 ft.; Kasbek, 16,546 ft.; Mishirgi-tau; Gestola, 15,932 ft.; Tetruld, 15,918 ft.; Ushba, 15,409 ft.; and Adai-khokh, 15,274 ft. The culminating point of the Little Caucasus is Alagös, 13,500 ft.

Caudebéc-en-Caux, kôd'bék' ðe' ko, a town of France, in Seine-Inférieure, on the Seine, at the influx of the Caudebéc River, 28 miles E. of Havre. Celebes, sél'e-bes (native, Negri-Orang-Bugis, and also Tana-Bugis, or Tana-Mangkesser, contracted into Macassar), an island and Dutch possession in the Malay Archipelago, between Borneo on the W. and the Moluccas on the E., extending from lat. 1° 50' N. to 5° 52' S., and from lon. 118° 45' to 125° 15' E. Area, about 72,000 sq. m. CELEBES is properly the name of the E. part only, and MACASSAR of the W. part. The island consists mainly of four large peninsulas, stretching to the E. and S. and separated by three deep gulfs. Of these peninsulas, that of Menado (known also as Minahassa in its NE. section), on the N., sweeps E. and NE. for 400 miles, with a breadth varying from 30 to 60 miles; that of Macassar, on the SW., forms a parallelogram, 200 miles long and 40-60 miles broad. They are all formed by chains of mountains running seemingly from a common central territory, which may be that of the Latimojong Range. The great gulfs separating the arms of the island are Gorontalo, or Tomini, S. of the Menado peninsula, on the NE.; Tomaiki, or Tolo, on the E.; and Macassar, or Boni, on the S. There is little foreland, and in most places the surface rises abruptly from the sea. The mountains of the peninsula consist mainly of ancient gneisses and schists, but in the south there are sedimentary deposits of Mesozoic (and Tertiary?) age, which seem to culminate in the peak of Lampo Batang (or Bonthain), thought to be over 10,000 feet in elevation. Mount Donda, in the extreme N., is credited with a nearly equal height, as is likewise Koruue, in the E. Most of the volcanic activity of the island is centred in the Minahassa region, where Klabat has an elevation of 6800 ft., Saputan of 5963 ft., and Gunong Sudara of 4400 ft. The largest river of the island is the Sadang, in the W., which, however, like all the other streams, is barely navigable. There are a number of lakes, of which the largest is Poso, almost exactly in the centre. Labaya, in the SW., communicates E. with the Gulf of Boni, and is the seat of an early native civilization which sent its ramifications over the whole archipelago. The Chirrana flows from this lake, and is navigable by European vessels for some distance and by the native prahus as far as the lake.

Though crossed by the equator, Celebes is remarkably healthy. Its extreme heats are tempered by the sea-breezes, by rains, and by the north winds that prevail for part of the year. The east monsoon lasts from May to November, and the west during the remaining months. The rainfall is very abundant, ranging from about 50 to 130 inches. The extreme temperature hardly ranges beyond 90°. The soil generally consists of a bed of vegetable mould lying on decomposing volcanic débris. Gold is found in the Menado peninsula, which is often convulsed by earthquakes and abounds in sulphur. An inferior quality of coal is found in the Menado peninsula. Copper of good quality occurs at various points, and in Macassar tin also is mined. Precious stones are found in some of the river-beds.

The island is entirely destitute of the large carnivorous animals, nor has it the elephant, rhinoceros, or tapir. The fauna is a largely specialized one, and while it has distinct affinities with the faunas of both the Malasian and Australian regions, it gives evidence that the region which it characterizes is one of long isolation, or perhaps even a fragment of a distinct continental area that has long since disappeared. Of the more distinctive mammalian types are a species of black tailed baboon, a small buffalo (the anoa), the babirusa, a wild pig, deer, the singular marsupial known as the cuscus, and the tarsier lemur. Reptiles are very numerous, and include the python, crocodile, and turtles. Among domesticated animals are horses, buffaloes, goats, sheep, and pigs.

Dense and magnificent forests clothe the mountain-sides; and in these are found the oak, teak, cedar, upas, clove- and nutmeg-trees, the sago and other palms, the pepper-vine, sandal-wood, mango, silk-cotton tree, the badeau, from which the Macassar oil is extracted, fustic-wood, ebony, betel-nut tree, and ginger-plant. Among plants requiring cultivation are the coffee-tree, indigo, cacao, sugar-cane, mountain rice, corn, banana, the manioc root, benzoin, and tobacco.

The chief articles of export are coffee, of a very excellent quality, dammar, trepang, nutmegs, copra, copal, and tobacco, most of which pass through the ports of Macassar, Menado, Gorontalo, and Kema.

The interior of Celebes is largely inhabited by the Alfuras. The Bugis constitute the handsomest race, physically resembling the Polynesians more than the Malays, to which latter they are far superior in point of honesty and general character. The more civilized inhabitants profess Mohammedanism, but many, especially in the N., have been converted to Christianity. Several independent nations inhabit Celebes. The native princes or rajahs recognize the authority of the Dutch, who have had a footing in Celebes almost continuously since they expelled the Portuguese, in 1660. Women occasionally reign as queens. In 1512 the Portuguese found but few Mohammedans; and it was not until a century afterwards that Islam was generally adopted. The population is thought to number between 1,000,000 and 2,000,000. Administratively the island is divided into the two residences of Menado and Celebes.

Central America, a name applied by geographers to that part of the North American continent, or of the American land-mass generally, which lies between the isthmus of Panama and that of Tehuantepec. It includes the Spanish-American republics of Guatemala, Honduras, Salvador, Nicaragua, and Costa Rica, and the colony of British Honduras (Belize), with a small or greater part of the republic of Panama; and the states of Chiapas and Tabasco, as well as the peninsula of Yucatan (all Mexican), are geographically united to it. Some writers regard Mexico, as a whole, as also forming a part of Central America; by others, again, the term is restricted to the five republics of Guatemala, Salvador, Nicaragua, Honduras and Costa Rica. Indeed, from a geographic point of view, Central America can only be regarded as a transition tract or connecting bond between two main continental areas, and there is hardly more reason to consider it structurally a part of the continent of the north than of that of the south. The dominant physiographic lines show the greater part, in fact, to be more nearly Antillean (Cuban and Jamaican) in its relationship, the final continental connections across the two isthmuses having been established during a late (middle Tertiary or later) period. In its generally accepted narrower sense, Central America is an irregular mass of land lying between the Caribbean Sea on the E. and the N. and the Pacific Ocean on the SW., and having the Gulf of Mexico on the NW. and N. It is a mountainous region, with many high plateaus of limited extent, and containing many volcanoes. A portion of the ancient Guatemalan mountains is unquestionably continued into the so-called Sierra Madre Occidental or Pacifico of Mexico, but the prolongation of the Andes only questionably extends beyond the narrow isthmus of Panama. The volcanoes are among the loftiest summits of the land, and characterize a region of unusual destructivity; those best known are Fuego, Agua, Tajumulco (13,814 feet), Tacaná (13,334 ft.), Acatenango (12,992 ft.), and Santa Maria, in Guatemala; Conchagua and Isaleco, in Salvador; Momotombo, Masaya, Omotepe, and Coseguina, in Nicaragua (the last-named, a mountain of only Vesuvian proportions, but recording, 1835, one of the most catastrophic eruptions known to history); and Irasá, Poas, Turrialba, and Chiriquí, in Costa Rica. Earthquakes are of frequent occurrence and of marked severity.

The rivers of Central America are mostly unimportant, or at least ill-adapted to navigation, being largely interrupted by rapids. Of the larger ones are the Usamasinta in the NW.; the Patuca, in Honduras; and the Wanks, Grande, and San Juan, in Nicaragua, the last being the outlet of the large interior Lake Nicaragua. Approximately on the NW. and SE. limits of the region are the Coatsacocas and Chagres rivers.

The climate is essentially tropical, hot and moist, but is materially tempered in the elevated tracts. In the lowlands the mean temperature of the coolest month differs only by a few degrees from that of the warmest. There are the three usually recognized tropical zones, the sierra caliente, extending from sea-level to about 2000-2500 ft., characterized by growths of rubber, mahogany, coconut, and cacao; the sierra templada, 2000-6000 ft., the favored zone for coffee-culture; and the sierra fría, following above 6000 ft. and largely productive of grain. The limit of forest-growth is about 12,500 ft. The fauna of Central America is essentially Neotropical and differs little from that of South America. The mineral wealth is considerable, but it has up to this time been only indifferently developed. Gold is worked in Costa Rica, Nicaragua, and elsewhere.

The people are chiefly of the Indian and Hispano-Indian stock. Agriculture is a leading pursuit. Chief products are cacao, indigo, coffee, india-rubber, mahogany, sarsaparilla, hides, deer-skins, fruits, tortoise-shell, etc. The region was conquered by the Spaniards in 1523-25. The colonies of Central America declared themselves independent of Spain in 1821. In 1823 a federal republic was constituted, which was dissolved in 1839. The progress of these countries has been much hindered by frequent political revolutions. The Central American republics have the following (approximate) areas: Guatemala, 43,300 sq. m.; Nicaragua, 47,800 sq. m.; Honduras, 46,200 sq. m.; Costa Rica, 20,900 sq. m.; and Salvador, 8150 sq. m. (See the names of the particular countries above enumerated.)

Central Asia, a designation applied in a broad sense to a territory comprising about one-third of the Asiatic continent and embracing most of the thinly inhabited or uninhabited portions of the Chinese Empire, together with Russian Turkestan (with Bokhara and Khiva) and the highlands of Iran (Persia and Afghanistan). The eastern half, or Central Asia within the Chinese Empire, lies between the Altai Mountains on the N. and the Tibetan plateau on the S., and extends eastward from the Pamir plateau to the Khyngan mountains and the ranges between which are the upper courses of the Hoang-ho and the Yangtze-kiang. Its chief features are the vast Hanhai steppe, with the desert of Gobi, and the Tian-shan and Kuen-un mountains. The scanty streams of this great walled-in area empty into salt lakes without outlets or are absorbed into the sands. The main divisions are known as Mongolia and East Turkestan.

Gr. Κεφαλληνία; L. Cephalonia), Keph-alô'nia, or Kephallinia, kêf-â-loo-nee-â, an island of the Mediterranean, one of the largest of the Ionian Islands belonging to Greece. It is a few miles W. of the mainland and about 3 miles from Ithaca, between lat. 38° 4' and 38° 29' N. and lon. 20° 21' and 20° 49' E. Length 32 miles; breadth, from 5 to 12 miles. Area, about 260 sq. m. Pop. in 1899, 80,178. The surface is generally mountainous. A calcareous ridge traverses the island from NW. to SE., the highest summit of which, Megas Soros, the ancient Ænus, is about 5300 feet above the sea. The only plain in the island of any extent is in the SW., near Argostoli. The coast-line is deeply marked with indentations. The bay of Argostoli extends about 7 or 8 miles inland. Nearly every available spot in the island has been brought under cultivation. Immense quantities of currants are exported. The other products are wheat, oil, wine, cotton, flax, oranges, lemons, figs, and carobs. The inhabitants are nearly all Greeks and are noted for their sea-faring qualities. The chief towns are Argostoli (the capital) and Lixuri.

Cephalonia was known anciently by various names, being called Samos in the Odyssey, and Tetrapolis by Thucydides. In 189 B.C. the island came under the Roman dominion. For centuries it was a possession of Venice. (See IONIAN ISLANDS.) Cephalonia, with some other islands, including

Ithaca, forms one of the nomes of Greece, which in 1896 had a population of 83,363.

Cephis'sia, or Kephis'sia, a village of Greece, 12 miles NE. of Athens, with remains of antiquity.

Cephisus, or Cephisus, a river of Attica, also called Podoniphti, which rises on the slopes of Mount Pentelicon and Parnes, and waters the plain W. of Athens. Another stream of Attica, emptying near Eleusis, now called Sarantaporos, anciently bore the name of Cephisus.

Cephi'sus, or Cephis'sus (Gr. Κηφισός or Κηφισός), the ancient name of a river of Greece, now called Mavronero, which flows through Phocis and Boeotia and whose waters are discharged into the channel of Euboea. It until recently formed a large shallow lake, called in antiquity Copais and in modern times Topolias, which has been drained.

Ceram', called by the natives Serang, sêr-râng', an island in the Malay Archipelago, the second largest of the Moluccas, lies between Buru on the W. and Papua on the E., and immediately NE. of Amboyna. It stretches from lat. 2° 47' to 3° 50' S. and from lon. 127° 57' to 130° 56' E. Area, about 6800 sq. m. It is traversed by mountain-ranges rising from a table-land of considerable elevation and sending down innumerable streams to the sea. The summit-crest of the mountains lies generally between 6000 and 8000 feet, and culminates in Nusa-heli, about 9600 feet in height. The island is densely covered with a luxuriant vegetation, of which the cocoanut and sago-palm constitute prominent figures. There is little cultivation, and the rice, tobacco, coffee, and cacao-fields are confined almost exclusively to seaboard patches. Clove- and nutmeg-trees grow wild, and the woods abound in magnificent forest-trees. Near the E. end, on the N. side, is the village of Waru, on the bay of the same name. At Amahai, on the S. coast, appears to be the only good harbor, although Sawai, on the N., is frequented by whalers.

The coasts are peopled by bold and enterprising Malay fishermen and traffickers, who carry the produce of their fisheries to the Sunda Islands and Singapore. The interior is peopled by the Alifaras, or by a people of possibly mixed Papuan descent. The country is governed by native chiefs under Dutch supervision. The island forms part of the residency of Amboyna.

The aborigines of Ceram are mostly idolaters, and the coast population is generally Mohammedan. Christian missionaries have made numerous converts along the coasts. Notwithstanding its superabundant fertility, Ceram is very thinly peopled. The population is probably less than 100,000.

Near by is the splendid Carthusian monastery (now a "national monument"), La Certosa di Pavia, which was begun in 1396, and whose façade, in the Lombard-Romanesque style, is ranked among the finest creations of its kind of the fifteenth century.

Cerulean, a banking post-town of Trigg co., Ky., 12 miles NNE. of Cadis. Pop. in 1900, 190.

Cervaro, chèn-và'ro (anc. Cerbalus), a river of Italy, rises in the Apennines near Ariano and, after a NE. course of 50 miles, enters the Gulf of Manfredonia.

Cervaro, a town of Italy, province of Caserta, 22 miles SE. of Sora. Pop. about 2000 (commune, 5000).

Cerveira, or Villa Nova da Cerveira, vil'là no'vâ dà sèn-và'e-rà, a town of Portugal, 16 miles N. of Vianna, on the Minho. Pop. about 2000.

Cervera, thèn-và'rà, a town of Spain, 28 miles E. of Lérida. It stands on a conspicuous height and is enclosed by old walls. The principal edifices are those of its former university (united with that of Barcelona) and some handsome churches and convents. Ferdinand and Isabella were married here in 1469. Pop. in 1900, 4350.

Cervera del Rio Alhama, thèn-và'rà dèl ree'o àl-à'mà, a town of Spain, province of Logroño, 18 miles S. of Calahorra. Pop. in 1900, 5930.

Cervera de Pisuerga, a town of Spain, 58 miles N. of Palencia. Pop. about 1000.

Cerveteri, chèn-và't-à-re, or Cervetri, chèn-và'tree (i.e., CERE VETERE, Cere Veteris, "Old Cere,"—anc. Cæ're), a village of Italy, in the Campagna, 27 miles W. of Rome. Cere was in antiquity one of the 12 great cities of Etruria. Its acropolis is occupied by the modern village, and remains of Pelasgic walls and Etruscan tombs still exist.

Cervia, chên've-â, a town of Italy, in Emilia, 13 miles SSE. of Ravenna, on the Adriatic. Its salt-works in the adjoining marshes are important. Cervia is a bishop's see. Pop. about 2000 (commune, in 1901, 7942).

Cervignano, chên-vîn-yâ'no, a town of Austria-Hungary, in Görz and Gradisca, circle of Gradisca, on the Ausso, a small navigable stream flowing into the Adriatic. Pop. about 2500.

Cervin, Mont. See MATTERHORN.

Cervoli, chên-vo'lee, a small island of Italy, in the Mediterranean, 5 miles E. of Elba.

Cesano Maderno, châ-sâ'no mâ-dên'no, a village of Italy, 10 miles N. by W. of Milan, on the Seveso. Pop. (commune) about 5500.

Cesaro, châ-sâ'ro, a town of Sicily, on a hill, 7½ miles NW. of Bronte. Pop. (commune) in 1901, 4744.

Cesena, châ-sâ'nâ, a town of Italy, province of Forlì, 12 miles SE. of Forlì, on the Emilian Way. Principal buildings are the town-hall in the great square, the Capuchin church, with a fine painting by Guercino, the library founded in 1463 and rich in MSS., a cathedral, and a large theatre. Popes Pius VI. and VII. were both natives of this town, and a colossal statue of the former adorns the town-hall. Large quantities of sulphur are obtained in the vicinity. The wine of Cesena was already noted in antiquity. Pop. in 1901, 7623 (commune, 42,240).

Cesenatico, châ-sâ-nâ'te-ko, a town of Italy, in Emilia, 9 miles ENE. of Cesena, on the Adriatic. Pop. about 2500 (commune, 7500).

Cessenon, sês'seh-nôm', a village of France, in Hérault, 15 miles E. of St. Pons, on the Orbe. Pop. about 2000.

Cessna, a post-village of Bedford co., Pa., 9 miles N. of Bedford. Pop. about 175.

Cesson, sês'sôm', a village of France, in Ile-et-Vilaine, 3 miles E. of Rennes, on the Vilaine.

Cestohowa, a post-village of Carnes co., Tex.

Cestona, thês-to'nâ, a village of Spain, in Guipúzcoa, 11 miles SW. of San Sebastián, near the Urola.

Cetara, châ-tâ'ra, a town of Italy, on the Gulf of Salerno, 3 miles SW. of Salerno. Pop. about 2000.

Cétom, sâ'tôm', a small town of France, in Orne, 23 miles SSE. of Mortagne.

Cetona, châ-to'nâ, a town of Italy, province of Siena, 10 miles SW. of Chiusi. It is built around the foot of Mount Cetona, and has a castle, a rich collection of Etruscan antiquities, a palace, etc. Pop. about 1500.

Cetraro, châ-trâ'ro, a town of Italy, with a small fishing-port on the Mediterranean, 24 miles NW. of Cosenza. Pop. about 2500.

Cetronia, a post-village of Lehigh co., Pa. Pop. about 250. The banking point is Allentown.

Cette, sêtt, a fortified town of France, in Languedoc, department of Hérault, on a tongue of land separating the salt lagoon of Thau from the Mediterranean, 17 miles SW. of Montpellier. Lat. 43° 23' N.; lon. 3° 42' E. It is of modern origin, having been founded by Colbert, the minister of Louis XIV., in 1666. Its harbor is spacious and secure, and is formed by two piers with a breakwater in front. A broad and deep canal, bordered with quays and warehouses, connects the port with the lagoon and with the Canal du Midi, as well as with canals leading to the Rhone, by which means Cette carries on an extensive traffic. In the volume of its sea trade it ranks next to Marseilles among the Mediterranean ports of France. Cette has also active fisheries and carries on ship-building. The importation, mixing, rectification, and shipping of wines, with the making of casks, constitute the leading business of the inhabitants. Cette is the residence of various consuls, and has a tribunal of commerce, a school of navigation, and a marine zoological station connected with the University of Montpellier. The town is a sea-side resort. Cette derives its name from Mons Sêntius, the ancient name of a low mountain, Mont St. Clair, at the base of which it is built. Pop. in 1901, 33,246.

Cettina, or Cetina, tsê't-e-nâ, a river of Dalmatia, which rises in the Dinaric Alps and, after a precipitous course of 60 miles, falls into the Adriatic at Almisca. At one place it forms a water-fall over 150 feet in height.

Cettinje, or Cetinje, chêt-teen'yâ, written also Cettigne, capital of the principality of Montenegro, 17 miles ENE. of Cattaro, in Dalmatia, with which it is connected by a costly mountain road, and about 25 miles N. of the seaport of Antivari. It is situated in a narrow valley, at an elevation of about 2000 feet, and consists in part of an old fortified monastery. It has an arsenal, a theatre (in which are the state library and national museum), a theological seminary, a gymnasium, and a girls' high school, supported by the empress of Russia. The residence of the prince is a modest building. Pop. in 1896, 2920.

Ceuta, su'tâ (Sp. pron. thê'ô-tâ; name corrupted from the Arabic Sebia, which was evidently derived from the Roman Septem Fratres, applied to the heights near the ancient Abyla, the site of which is close to the town), a seaport town of Africa, belonging to Spain, in Morocco, opposite and 17 miles S. by E. of Gibraltar. Lat. (Mount Acho) 35° 54' N.; lon. 5° 16' W. The castle occupies the highest point (636 feet) of Mount Acho (the ancient Abyla, and one of the Pillars of Hercules, the rock of Gibraltar being the other) at the extremity of the peninsula of Almina. On the narrow isthmus at the opposite extremity is another strong citadel; and between the two is the town, which has a cathedral, several convents, a hospital, a convict establishment, and schools. Ceuta has many points of resemblance to Gibraltar; it is well supplied with water, and, if properly garrisoned, would be all but impregnable from the sea side. It is, however, dominated by the surrounding heights, and thus loses strategic importance. It is a bishop's see, and the residence of a military governor. Ceuta was a busy emporium of trade in the Middle Ages, but, although now a free port, its commercial activity has practically ceased. It was taken from the Moors by Portugal in 1416, and has belonged to Spain since 1590. Pop. in 1897, 12,862.

Ceva, châ'vâ (anc. Ce'ba), a town of Italy, in Piedmont, 26 miles E. of Cuneo, on the Tanaro. It stands at the foot of a rock, on which is a dismantled citadel. Pop. about 3000; of the commune, in 1901, 5140.

Cevedale (châ-vâ-dâ-lâ), Monte, a summit of the Eastern Alps, in the Ortler group. Height, 12,380 feet.

Cévennes, sâ'vênn' (anc. Ceben'na or Ceben'na Mons), a range of mountains in the S. of France, between the Alps and the mountains of Auvergne, and lying mainly W. of the Rhone. They form in great part the SE. boundary of the central plateau of France, and are largely of granitic and volcanic construction. In their broadest limits they extend from the Canal du Midi, N. of Carcassonne, north-eastward to the Côte d'Or mountains, and are divided into the South and North Cévennes: the former, under the names of the Montagnes Noires, Espinouse, Garrigues, and Lozère, extend over 120 miles to Mont Lozère, where the chain forms a group called Monts du Gévaudan, which sends several contreforts to the N. and S. The North Cévennes take the names of Monts Vivarais, Lyonnais, Beaujolais, and Charolais. The Loire, Allier, Lot, Aveyron, Tarn, Hérault, Gard, and other rivers have their sources in these mountains, the S. portions of which contain many extinct volcanoes and present many deep fissures in the higher valleys. The highest points are Mézenc, in the northern division, 5755 feet; and Lozère (Pio de Finiels), 5580 ft., in the southern division, which also contains Mont Aigouat, immediately bounding the calcareous plateau called the Causse Noir, 5140 ft. The Cévennes served as a retreat for numerous Protestant families after the revocation of the edict of Nantes.

Cévennes, an old district of France, which formed the NE. part of Languedoc. Capital, Mende. It was divided into Gévaudan, Velay, Vivarais, and Cévennes proper, the last now chiefly included in the department of Gard.

Ceylon, see lon' or sil-on' (from Sanskrit Sinhala; in the writings of the Singhalese, Sinhala; Gr. and L. Taprobane; the Lanka of the old Hindu poets; the Serendib of the mediæval Arab writers), an island of the Indian Ocean, forming a crown colony of Great Britain. It is separated from peninsular India by Palk Strait and the Gulf of Manar, but is virtually joined to it by the submerged coral reef known as Adam's Bridge. The island lies between lat. 5° 55' and 9° 51' N.; lon. 79° 41' and 81° 55' E. Length, N. and S., 267 miles; greatest breadth, 137 miles. Area, including some small coast-islands, 25,333 sq. m. The surface is generally mountainous in the S., with comparatively little lowland, but towards the N. it expands into a great wide plain, much of which is still almost impenetrable jungle. The loftiest elevation is Piduru Talagala (or Pedro-talagalla), 8296 feet; the second summit is Adam's Peak, 7353 feet. Except in parts where there is a deficiency of rainfall, the soil is mostly very fertile and the vegetation is luxuriant almost beyond description; and the island has been described as the "pearl garden" of the earth. Woodland covers many of the mountains nearly to the summit; elsewhere they are cultivated with tea, coffee, coconut, cinnamon, and cinchona, the great staples of the island. The coffee plantations are to-day less important than those of tea. Ceylon furnishes the chief supply of cinchona to Europe, and ranks as third among the tea-producing countries of the world. The longest river of the island is the Mahavilla Ganga (assumed to be the Ganges of Ptolemy), which flows into the sea at Trinkomali. There are no lakes of any size, but vast reservoir basins, forming part of the irrigation processes of the present day as well as of the past, are found in different parts of the island. The climate is tropical, but the heat is tempered by the surrounding sea. The period of greatest heat is in the interval between the two monsoons, or in the months of February to May. The highest temperature of Colombo is approximately 95°, with a mean of 80°; the rainfall is nearly 90 inches. The hill-country has, during the months of December to May, a delightful climate; at the sanatorium of Newara Eliya, located at an elevation of upward of 6000 feet, the mean annual temperature is 58°.

The mineral resources of the country include precious stones,—the rubies and sapphires being especially famous,—gold, iron, and plumbago (or graphite), the last being extensively mined. About 18,000 tons of the mineral are exported annually. Among the indigenous animals are the elephant, bear, panther, several species of deer and monkey, peacock, etc. Pearl oysters abound on the coast, and the fishery affords in some years a handsome revenue. The dominant race of people, comprising about two-thirds of the population, are the Singhalese, who speak a modern Indian dialect, an Aryan tongue, with a large admixture of Dravidic elements. They are Buddhists. The Tamils, a Dravidic people, mainly adherents of Brahmanism, make up one-fourth of the population. The bulk of the remainder are Mohammedans (Moormen), chiefly of Arabic descent. Among the wild mountain tribes are the degraded Veddas. The Eurasians, descendants of Europeans and Singhalese, are known as Burghers. The government is administered by a British governor, appointed by the colonial office in London, who is assisted by an executive council of 5 and a legislative council of 17 members. The principal towns are Colombo, the capital and chief seaport, Jaffna, Kandy, Peradeniya, Trincomali, and Point de Galle. Pop. in 1891, 3,008,239; in 1901, 3,576,990. The number of Europeans is about 10,000, and there are about 33,000 Eurasians. The Portuguese reached Ceylon in 1505, and in 1517 they began the establishment of commercial settlements. They were driven from the island in the middle of the seventeenth century by the Dutch, who occupied the coasts. In 1795-96 Ceylon passed into the possession of England.

Ceylon, a banking post-village of Martin co.; Minn., on the Chicago and Northwestern R.

Ceylon, a post-village of Erie co., Ohio, on Lake Erie and on the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern R., 13 miles ESE. of Sandusky. Pop. about 200.

Chachani, a mountain of Peru, about 22 miles N. of Arequipa. Elevation, 19,800 (?) feet. A meteorological station was established on the mountain, in 1894, at an altitude of 16,600 feet.

Chachapoyas, châ-châ-po'yâs, sometimes called San Juan de la Frontera, sâ-juân' dâ lâ frôn-tâ'râ, a town of Peru, capital of the department of Amazonas, 80 miles NE. of Cajamarca. It is a bishop's see. It has a fine cathedral, a grand plaza, and is clean and well paved. Pop. about 6000. Elevation, 7600 feet.

Chaco, a government or territory in the N. of the Argentine Republic, bordering on the Paraguay River. Chief town, Resistencia. See GRAN CHACO, EL.

Chaco, El Gran. See GRAN CHACO, EL.

Chad, Tchad, châd, written also Tsad, a lake of central Africa, bounded by the kingdoms or territories of Bornu, Kanem, Wadai, and Baghirmi, and lying mainly between lat. 12° 30' and 14° 30' N. It is in the French Military Territory of the Chad. The lake covers an area, varying according to the rainfall, of from 6000 to 30,000-40,000 sq. m., and occupies a mean height above the sea of about 830 feet—with the exception of the depression of Bodele, to the NE., which seems to have at times received the surplus waters of the lake through the lagoon-arm Bahr-el-Ghazal, probably the lowest point of the entire Sudan. The waters of the lake, which has no regular outlet, are fresh and shallow (8 to 20 feet), and largely overgrown with reeds and other plants. There are numerous islands or islets, especially in the SE. part. For much of the contour there is no clearly-defined shore-line, the lake running out into lagoon-arms and intercommunicating channels. The chief tributaries are the Shari, in the S., and the Yea, in the W. The lake is stocked with fish, water-fowl, turtles of enormous size, and crocodiles; and large game (lion, hippopotamus, elephant, etc.) is very plentiful in the surrounding country. Recent explorations have determined the existence of a high water connection between the Shari and Benue (Benué) river systems.

Chadbourne, a post-town of Columbus co., N.C., on the Atlantic Coast Line, 7 miles W. of Whitville. Pop. in 1900, 243.

Chadda, a river of Africa. See BENUE.

Chadds Ford, a post-village of Delaware co., Pa., on Brandywine Creek and on the Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore R., 30 miles WSW. of Philadelphia and 12 miles WSW. of Media. The battle of Brandywine was fought here, Sept. 11, 1777.

Chadds Ford Junction, a hamlet of Chester co., Pa.

Chadron, a banking city, capital of Dawes co., Neb., on the Fremont, Elkhorn and Missouri Valley R., 150 miles S. of Deadwood, S.Dak. It has roller-mills, and is an important trade and stock-centre. Pop. in 1900, 1665.

Chadwick, a banking post-village of Carroll co., Ill., on the Burlington Route, 56 miles SE. of Dubuque. Pop. in 1900, 505.

Chadwick, a post-hamlet of Ionia co., Mich.

Chadwick, a post-village of Christian co., Mo., 9 miles SE. of Ozark. Pop. 100.

Chadwick, a resort of Ocean co., N.J., on Squan Beach.

Chadwicks, a post-village of Oneida co., N.Y., 8 miles by rail S. of Utica, its banking point. Pop. 350.

Chæroneæ, kër-o-ne'e's (Gr. Χερώνεια), an ancient city of Greece, in Boeotia, famous for a victory gained by Philip of Macedon over the Athenians and Thebans, 338 B.C., and for Sulla's victory over the general of Mithridates, 86 B.C. Its remains, near the village of Kaprena, a few miles N. of Livadia, include a theatre, one of the most perfect in Greece. The mutilated colossal lion surmounting the sepulchre of the Boeotians who fell at the battle of Chæroneæ, mentioned by Pausanias, has been exhumed. Plutarch was a native of the town.

Chasferinas, châ-fâ-ree-nâs (Zafarani), a group of 3 small islands, off the N. coast of Morocco, not far from Melilla, belonging to Spain.

Chaffee, a central county of Colorado. Area, 1224 sq. m. It is intersected by tributaries of the Arkansas River. It is in the Rocky Mountains, and has the Park Range on the NE. and the Saguache Mountains (a branch of the continental divide) on the W. In the N. is Mount Harvard, 14,375 feet high. Capital, Buena Vista. Pop. in 1890, 6612; in 1900, 7085.

Chaffee, a post-hamlet of Cass co., N.Dak., 25 miles (direct) WSW. of Fargo, on a branch of the Great Northern R. Pop. about 40.

Chagny, shān'yē', a town of France, in Saône-et-Loire, 10 miles NW. of Chalon-sur-Saône. Pop. in 1901, 4547.

Chagos Islands, an extensive archipelago in the Indian Ocean, being a southward extension of the Maldive group. Lat. 4° 40'–8° S.; lon. 71°–73° E. They are all small and disposed in many minor groups. The best known island is Grand Chagos or Diego Garcia, in the SE., which has a good harbor. The islands are claimed by Great Britain and are scantily peopled. They have been assumed by geologists to occupy the summit of a subsided area and to have been built up by successive coral growths. Pop. about 1000.

Chagres, chā'grēs, a small town of the republic of Panama, on the N. coast of the isthmus of Panama, at the mouth of the Chagres River. Lat. 9° 18' N.; lon. 79° 59' W. It is a mere collection of huts, miserable and unhealthy, with a harbor for vessels drawing 10 or 12 feet of water. The entrance to the harbor is rather difficult, requiring a fair wind. Formerly of some importance, it has, since the construction of the Panama railway, been superseded by Colón. Pop. about 1000.

Chagres River, of the republic of Panama, rises in the San Blas mountains, about 30 miles NE. of Panama, and enters the Caribbean Sea in lat. 9° 18' N. It traverses a fertile country, and below the influx of the Trinidad its depth varies from 16 to 30 feet; but its navigation is impeded by numerous falls and by its great rapidity. Its course is followed for some distance by the Panama railway. The control of the Chagres River has been considered one of the main difficulties in the construction of the Panama Canal.

Chagrin (sha-green') Falls, a banking post-village of Cuyahoga co., Ohio, on the Chagrin River and on the Wheeling and Lake Erie R., 18 miles ESE. of Cleveland. It has marble, granite and flagstone-quarries, manufactures of machinery, oil-stoves, wooden goods, etc. Pop. in 1900, 1586.

Chagrin (or Chagrine) River, Ohio, rises in Geauga co., flows SW. to Chagrin Falls, thence through Cuyahoga co., and enters Lake Erie in the W. part of Lake co.

Chaillac, shā'yāk', a town of France, in Indre, 17 miles SE. of Le Blanc. Pop. (commune) about 2500.

Chailland, shā'yōm', a town of France, in Mayenne, on the Ernée, 11 miles NNW. of Laval. Pop. about 1500.

Chaille-les-Maraais, shī lā mā'rā', a village of France, in Vendée, 28 miles SE. of La Roche-sur-Yon.

Chain, a post-village of Schuylkill co., Pa.

Chain Island, or Anaa, an island in the Pacific Ocean, in the Anaa group of the Low or Tuamotu Archipelago.

Chain of Rocks, a post-village of Lincoln co., Mo., 8 miles NNE. of Wentzville.

Chaires, a post-hamlet of Leon co., Fla., 12 miles E. of Tallahassee. Pop. about 75.

Chaise-Dieu, La. See LA CHAISE-DIEU.

Chaix Hills, a series of mountain elevations of the St. Elias group, Alaska.

Chaki-Chaki, chā'kee chā'kee, the chief town of Pemba Island, eastern equatorial Africa.

Chala, chā'lā, a port of Peru, department of Arequipa, on the Pacific Ocean, about lat. 15° 50' S., lon. 74° 30' W.

Chalabre, shā'lāb'r', a town of France, in Aude, on the Lers, 24 miles SW. of Carcassonne. Pop. about 2000.

Chalais, shā'lā, a town of France, in Charente, 18 miles SE. of Barbezieux, on the Tude. Pop. about 800.

Chalamont, shā'lā'mōm', a town of France, department of Ain, 19 miles E. of Trévoux. Pop. about 2000.

Chalatenango, chā-lā-tā-nāng'o, a northern department of Salvador. Area, 650 sq. m. It is bounded on the S. by the Lempa River, and is intersected by its tributaries. The surface in the N. and NE. is mountainous. The products are wheat, corn, rice, and indigo, and it has several distilleries and manufactures of starch, turpentine, earthenware, cheese, and candles. Capital, Chalatenango. Pop. in 1892, 54,000.

Chalatenango, a city of Salvador, capital of Chalatenango department. It is on the Tamulaca and Coloco Rivers, at the foot of the mountains. It holds an important annual fair. Pop. about 6000.

Chalcedon, kal-sē'don, or Calchedon, kal-ke'don, an ancient Greek city of Bithynia, on the Bosporus, opposite Byzantium.

Chalcedony Butte, kāl-sēd'ō-ne būte, Colo., a mountain in lat. 38° 47' N., lon. 105° 41' W. It has an altitude of about 10,400 feet above sea-level.

Chalchicomula, chāl-che-ko-moo'lā, or San Andrés Chalchicomula, a town of Mexico, in the state of Puebla, situated near the foot of the peak of Orizaba, about 25 miles (direct) NW. of the town of Orizaba. Pop. about 7000.

Chalcidice, kal-sid'e-see, in ancient geography, a district of Macedonia, extending as a peninsula into the Aegean Sea. This peninsula divides into three prongs, Pallene, Sithonia, and Acte, the last named terminating in Mount Athos. Among the Greek cities of Chalcidice were Olynthus and Potidæa.

Chalcis, kal'sis, Chalkis, kāl'kis, or Neg'ropont, a seaport of Greece, capital of Euboea, on the Euripus, at its narrowest part, 17 miles NE. of Thebes. It has mediæval walls and towers, many edifices of Venetian construction, and a number of mosques, mostly converted into Christian churches. Ancient Chalcis was a flourishing seat of commerce and manufactures and a great colonizing centre. The three-pronged peninsula of Chalcidice, projecting from Macedonia into the Aegean Sea, took its name from Chalcis, which sent colonies thither. The town was important in the Middle Ages, and was called by the Greeks Egripo and by the Italians Negroponta. Pop. about 8000; of the commune, about 16,000.

The chief edifices are the mediæval cathedral, the town-hall, and the churches of Notre-Dame and St. Alpin. The town possesses a fine planted promenade, termed the Jard. Châlons is a bishop's see. It has a school of arts and trades, a botanical garden, a museum of natural history and antiquities, and a public library of 65,000 volumes. Châlons is an active centre of the champagne trade, and has extensive tanneries, manufactures of shoes, etc. About 18 miles NE. of the town Napoleon III. established a military camp on a vast scale. The place is still used for military exercises. At the beginning of the Middle Ages Châlons was one of the most important commercial cities of western Europe. From the tenth century it formed a kind of independent state, governed by its bishops, till 1360, when it was united to the crown. The great battle of Châlons, or of the Catalaunian Fields, in which the Romans and Visigoths arrested the progress of Attila in A.D. 451, appears, in the light of modern research, to have been fought at a considerable distance from the town, perhaps near the site of the modern Troyes. Pop. in 1901, 21,487.

Châlons-sur-Saône, shâ'lôn' sūz sôn (anc. Cabilo'nium), a town of France, in Burgundy, capital of an arrondissement in the department of Saône-et-Loire, on the right bank of the Saône, at the junction of the Canal du Centre, 36 miles N. of Mâcon. It is well built. A handsome quay stretches along the Saône, which here becomes navigable for steamboats. The principal structures are the cathedral, St. Peter's church, the prefecture, the town-hall, the Hospice St.-Laurent, and the Hospital of St. Louis. The valley, which has a length of 12 miles from NE. to SW. and a breadth of ½-2½ miles, forms the upper part of the basin of the Arve, is noted for its magnificent scenery, and is perhaps the most celebrated among all the picturesque sites of the Alps. It is bounded on the SE. by the mass of Mont Blanc and N. by Mont Brévent and the Aiguilles Rouges, part of the range which separates Savoy from Valais. The glaciers which descend into the valley from the Mont Blanc chain—the Tours, Argentière, Bois (Mer de Glace) and Bossons—are among the grandest in the Alps. The climate of the valley is extremely rigorous in winter, which lasts from October to May, during which time snow usually covers the lower ground to the depth of 8 feet. The summer is short and warm. The soil is infertile, but, being well cultivated, it produces a considerable supply of grain and fruits; cattle are extensively reared and the honey is excellent. Chamouni is a favorite tourist-resort and a starting-point for tours across the Tête-Noire and Col de Balme to Martigny, over the Col du Bonhomme to Courmayeur, and for the ascent of Mont Blanc. Localities of special interest in the vicinity are the Montanvert, Flégère, and Mer de Glace. A statue to Saussure was unveiled here in 1887. Elevation of the village, 3415 feet. Charleston, a port of entry, capital of a county of its own name, and the largest city of South Carolina, is situated on a tongue of land between the rivers Ashley and Cooper, which unite immediately below the town and form a spacious harbor, communicating with the Atlantic Ocean at Sullivan's Island, 7 miles below. It is 115 miles by rail NE. of Savannah and 580 miles SW. of Baltimore. Lat. 32° 46' N.; lon. 79° 57' W. A sandbar extends across the mouth of the harbor, affording, however, a deep-water channel near Sullivan's Island; since the late harbor improvements, safe entry is given to vessels of 23-24 feet draft. The harbor is defended by Castle Pinckney and forts Sumter and Ripley, each on an island, the first-named 1 mile and the last 6 miles below the city, and also by forts Moultrie, on Sullivan's Island, and Johnston, on James Island.

Charleston is regularly built, but retains, in its architectural features (lofty piazzas, etc.) and old landmarks, many of the peculiarities of the cities of the South. It has handsome and stately residences and a wealth of gardens with profuse vegetation, the exhibition of magnolias, jessamines, camellias, and azaleas being always an attractive feature of the city. The streets are bordered with live-oaks and other beautiful shade-trees, and are of generous width. Legaré Street and the Battery, a broad esplanade about 500 yards long, are part of the most aristocratic residential quarters.

The principal public buildings are the new custom-house, the city-hall, the court-house, academy of music, arsenal, and the South Carolina Military Academy. At the southern extremity of the city is a small park, called the White Point Garden, with beautiful live-oaks, which is a popular place of promenade. The most important educational and literary institutions are the College of Charleston (non-sectarian), which was founded in 1788 and reorganized in 1837; the Medical College of South Carolina, which was founded in 1833; the Charleston Library, founded in 1748; and the Military Academy above mentioned. The College of Charleston has a museum of natural history. The Avery Normal Institute is attended by about 400 colored students.

Charleston contains numerous churches (white and colored), among which St. Michael's (Episcopal), with its commanding tower and fine chimneys, is the most conspicuous. The city has also many benevolent and charitable institutions, among which are the Enston Home for the aged and the Confederate Home for Widows. The Orphan House, founded in 1792, is one of the oldest institutions of its kind in the country. Charleston is the seat of a Catholic bishop. The city has various manufactures (cotton, flour, carriages, baggings, textiles), extensive machine-shops, ship-yards, dry-docks, etc. The preparation or manufacture of fertilizers and lime-phosphates, large deposits of which are found on the Ashley River, constitutes its most important industry. The value of this industry is $6,000,000 to $7,000,000 annually.

Charleston is the chief commercial city of South Carolina, its facilities embracing a deep-water harbor and three railway lines,—the Southern, the Atlantic Coast Line, and Plant System,—which have termini here, and which are connected with the interior by important feeders. The chief articles of export are cotton, rice, phosphate, naval stores, and lumber. The quantity of cotton exported in 1901 was valued at $6,728,665. The city has a large wholesale trade in dry-goods, clothing, drugs, etc. The total value of the foreign exports for the year ending June 30, 1900, was $7,151,720; imports, $1,124,671. Steamships ply regularly between Charleston and the Atlantic ports of the United States, the Antilles, South America, and Europe. Points of interest or resort in the surroundings are the Isle of Palms, Magnolia Cemetery, the Gardens of Magnolia on the Ashley, and Chisora Park.

An English settlement was made here in 1670. In 1685-86 a company of French Huguenots, exiled for their religion, settled at this place. On June 28, 1776, a British squadron attacked the garrison on Sullivan's Island, consisting of 400 men under Colonel Moultrie, who defended the place with success. Charleston was besieged by Sir Henry Clinton from April 1, 1780, to May 12, when it was surrendered by General Lincoln. On April 12-13, 1861, the South Carolinians bombarded and captured Fort Sumter. This was the beginning of the Civil War. In April, 1863, a Federal fleet, commanded by Admiral Dupont, attacked the fortifications of Charleston without success. After a long siege the place was evacuated by the Confederates, Feb. 17, 1865. On Aug. 31, 1886, the city was visited by a disastrous earthquake, which wrecked property to the value of several millions of dollars and destroyed a number of human lives. An Interstate and West Indian Exposition was held here in 1901 and 1902. Pop. in 1800, 18,711; in 1820, 24,780; in 1840, 29,261; in 1860, 40,523; in 1880, 49,984; in 1890, 55,807; in 1900, 54,955.

Cherbourg, Fr. pron. shain'boor' (L. Caroburgus; anc. Coriallum?), a fortified seaport and great naval station of France, situated in the department of Manche (Normandy), on the English Channel, at the N. end of the peninsula of Cotentin, 82 miles W. by N. of Havre. Lat. 49° 40' N.; lon. 1° 38' W. It consists of the old town, back of which are rocky and wooded heights, and of the new or military town to the NW. Among the principal buildings are the old church of Ste.-Trinité, recently restored, the town-hall, which contains a gallery of paintings and a museum, and a new hospital. In front of the town-hall stands an equestrian statue of Napoleon I., and the public park is adorned with a monument to the painter Millet. The engineering works in connection with the port of Cherbourg, completed about half a century ago, represent the most stupendous achievement of hydraulic engineering. The commercial and naval ports are quite distinct from each other. The commercial port consists of a harbor and a basin about 1300 feet long and 400 feet wide. The channel from the harbor to the sea is about 2000 feet long and 164 feet wide, and is lined by a granite quay with parapets. The military port, which can accommodate about 40 vessels of war of the largest class, has three basins, excavated from the solid slate rock which forms the foundation of the entire yard, in places to a depth of 56 feet.

The great work for which Cherbourg is celebrated is the digue, or breakwater, stretching across the roadstead, which, though protected on three sides by the land, was open to the heavy seas from the N. The digue was commenced under Louis XIV., continued by Napoleon I., and finished in 1858. It is 2½ miles from the harbor, in water varying from 42 to 62 feet in depth, and has a length of 4130 yards. Its cost was 67,000,000 francs. The forts on this breakwater, on the island of Pelée, to the E., and at other points, render Cherbourg a well-nigh impregnable fortress. The dock-yards, arsenals, machine-shops, and forges of the military port are on a gigantic scale.

The town has become a frequented sea-side resort. It exports large quantities of farm- and poultry-produce to England. Pop. in 1901, 42,938.

Cherchell, or Shershell, shér'shél' (anc. Caesarea), a seaport town of Algeria, 56 miles WSW. of Algiers. Chester, a county of England. See CHESHIRE.

Chester (anc. Deva or Deva Castra), a city, parliamentary, and county borough of England, within the territorial limits of Cheshire, is situated on a rocky eminence, nearly encompassed by the river Dee, 20 miles from the Irish Sea and 16 miles SSE. of Liverpool. It is one of the oldest cities of England, and still retains many vestiges of the Roman and Norman periods. The picturesque and quaint aspect of Chester is due in a large measure to its ancient walls of sandstone, probably reared on a Roman substructure, which are still intact and surround the place for its entire circuit of two miles, forming promenades which command beautiful views. The town is divided into four districts by four streets, which radiate at right angles from the Cross, and terminate in four gates. The streets hewn out of the rock by the Romans at a depth of from 4 to 10 feet exhibit a most interesting feature of the town in what are known as the Rows. These Rows are continuous elevated galleries, running, in three of the streets, along either side of the street, the extension of the first floor of the houses forming a sort of gallery over the ground floor. The impression of quaintness and age which Chester creates is heightened by its old timbered houses of the seventeenth century and by the recent ones which are built in imitation of them.

The Grosvenor Bridge, a splendid single span of stone, 200 feet in length, crosses the Dee, and there is besides an interesting old bridge of seven arches. Outside of its ecclesiastical edifices the town has few public buildings of note. Chester Cathedral, a magnificent but irregular Norman-Gothic pile, several churches dating from the eleventh and twelfth centuries, and a portion of a castle founded by William the Conqueror are the most interesting structures. Among buildings of recent construction the great railway station deserves mention. The duke of Westminster, whose magnificent residence, Eaton Hall, is at a short distance from Chester, presented to the town, in 1867, the New Grosvenor Park and the Roodee, a level tract, used as a race-course.

Chester was at one time a busy seaport, but the silting of the channel of the Dee deprived it of its natural advantages. It has still a considerable coasting trade. Chester cheese is celebrated. The town returns 1 member to parliament. The Romans had an important station here. Pop. of the county borough in 1901, 38,369.

Chester, a county in the SE. part of Pennsylvania, has an area of 760 sq. m. Chicacole, or Chicacole, sik'á-kól', a town of British India, in Madras, district and 107 miles SW. of Ganjam. It is noted for its munnins. Pop. about 20,000.

Chicago, shí-ká'go or shí-kaw'go, a city, port of entry, and capital of Cook co., Ill., situated near the S. extremity of Lake Michigan, on its W. shore, about 700 miles in a direct line W. by N. of New York. Lat (main business quarter) 41° 53' N.; lon. 87° 36' W. Elevation above the sea, 600 feet. The narrow Chicago River, connecting with Lake Michigan, with its North and South Branches, divides the city into the North, West, and South Sides. The municipal district extends along the lake for about 26 miles. Chicago is the second city in the United States in population, and likewise the second in the volume of its trade and in commercial activity. It is the centre of the railway system of the United States, and its position gives it a great share of the prodigious commerce by way of the Great Lakes. With the progress of canal construction, it is destined in the near future to be connected by lines of ocean-steamers with every quarter of the globe.

The city, which covers an area of nearly 190 sq. m., rises but little above the level of the lake, and is laid out with the monotonous regularity that distinguishes the larger American cities generally. The business streets of first importance are State, Clark, Madison, Dearborn, and La Salle, and Wabash Avenue. In the grandeur and costliness of its business structures, Chicago is surpassed by New York only among the cities of the world. Among the more prominent buildings and institutions are the city-hall and county courthouse, a twin structure erected at a cost of nearly $5,000,000; the board of trade, with a tower 322 feet in height; the chamber of commerce, the Auditorium, containing a theatre having a seating capacity of 5000; Chicago Art Institute; Chicago Historical Society, with valuable collections of books and of relics pertaining largely to the Northwest; Chicago Academy of Sciences; Masonic Temple; Chicago Public Library; Newberry Library; and the Field Columbian Museum, with one of the most promising collections of natural history and archaeology in the United States. The University of Chicago, which was opened in 1892 as a successor to an earlier university (founded in 1857), is one of the leading institutions of learning in the country, and has full faculties of arts, science, commerce and politics, and philosophy, and a library of about 350,000 volumes. The number of enrolled students is about 3000, or, with auditors, 4000. Connected with the institution is the Yerkes Observatory, located on Williams Bay, Wis. Chicago is also the seat (in part) of the Northwestern University, with schools or colleges of medicine, law, dentistry, pharmacy, theology, and liberal arts, the last two located at Evanston; of the Rush Medical College, College of Physicians and Surgeons, Chicago College of Pharmacy, and the Armour Institute of Technology (founded in 1892). The public libraries of the city (Chicago Public Library, Newberry, and John Crerar libraries) are on a munificent scale, the first two containing together more than 500,000 volumes.

Chicago is generously provided with parks (Lincoln, Washington, Jackson, Garfield, Humboldt, Lake Front, the last-named adjoining the business section), which cover collectively upward of 2600 acres. These, with their connecting boulevards, offer 90 miles of driveway within the city limits. Among the finest boulevards and residence streets are the Lake Shore Drive, Michigan, Grand, and Drexel Boulevards. No city in the world presents such a perfected system of rail intercommunication. The method of water-supply by means of a tunnel running 4 miles into the lake is a triumph of hydraulic engineering, which is now eclipsed by the great drainage canal (at the same time a ship-canal), 28 miles long, which conveys the sewage of the city, through the Des Plaines River, into the Illinois River. This canal, which was begun in 1892 and formally opened in Jan., 1900, terminates at Lockport, and will give passage to vessels of 22 feet draught. The cost of construction was $33,000,000.

The industries and manufactures of Chicago are as varied as they are extensive. The city is the greatest grain market and also the largest lumber mart in the world, while in the industry of slaughtering cattle and hogs and preparing the meat products ("packing," "canning") for the market it occupies a unique position. The extensive Union Stockyards, which cover an area of about 400 acres, have accommodation for 75,000 head of cattle, 300,000 hogs, 80,000 sheep, and 6000 horses. The receipts in the stock-yards were, in 1900, 8,100,000 hogs, 3,500,000 sheep, and 2,700,000 cattle, besides about 100,000 horses, having a total valuation approximating $200,000,000. The number of men employed in the packing and canning-industry is upward of 20,000. The receipts of grain for the year 1900 were 314,000,000 bushels, and of lumber 1,576,000,000 feet, the exports of the latter being 770,000,000 feet. Among the more important general manufactures of the city may be mentioned those of railway cars, locomotives, agricultural implements, mining-appliances, clothing, electrical apparatus, lumber products, furniture, pianos, organs, bicycles, leather, cigars, chemicals, beer, spirits, and flour. The steel- and iron-industry is conducted on an enormous scale, and the city has some of the largest rolling-mills in the world. The value of the iron and steel product, including castings, was in 1900 $54,000,000; the product of the foundries and machine-shops, $44,500,000. Chicago is also one of the leading publishing-centres of the United States and is the active jobbing-centre of the book trade. Upward of 500 journals are published here, of which number some 25 are dailies.

The number of vessels that entered the port in 1900 was nearly 9000, with an aggregate tonnage of over 7,000,000, making Chicago in this respect one of the foremost places in the world. The imports of merchandise from foreign countries during the fiscal year 1899-1900 aggregated in value $15,309,725, and the exports, $5,211,770. The clearances of vessels engaged in the foreign trade were: sailing-vessels, 109; steam-vessels, 199.

The climate of Chicago, while generally healthy, is not altogether agreeable, owing to the high winds which prevail more particularly during the winter months. The mean temperature of the year is about 49°; of January, 25.5°; and of July, 73°. The annual rainfall is 37½ inches.

The name "Chicago" is of Indian origin, signifying either a wild onion, a king or deity, or a skunk. It was also applied to a valiant line of chiefs and to the voice of the Great Manitou. The first Europeans known to have visited the site were two French fur-traders in 1654. In 1673 the two explorers Joliet and Father Marquette passed down the Chicago River to the lake, and for a time this region was in the possession of France. The name Fort Chicagou appears on a map published in Quebec as early as 1685. In 1795 the Indian residents ceded to the United States an area of 6 miles square at the mouth of the river, on which, in 1804, Fort Dearborn was erected. The fort was burned by the Indians in 1812, after the garrison and the few white settlers had fallen into the hands of the Indians. Four years later the fort was rebuilt. Two years afterwards the surrounding territory was organized into the state of Illinois. In 1830, when there were about a dozen houses, a town was laid out. In 1831 the county of Cook was created, with Chicago as the county seat. The place was incorporated as a town in 1833. In the same year the first newspaper, known as the Chicago Democrat, was established. Chicago was chartered as a city in 1837, with a population of 4170. This was followed with 4853 in 1840, 29,993 in 1850, 112,172 in 1860, 298,977 in 1870, 503,185 in 1880, and 1,099,850 in 1890. The population in 1900 was 1,698,576, of whom about 475,000 were Germans, 470,000 Americans, 240,000 Irish, 105,000 Swedes, 95,000 Bohemians, 90,000 Poles, 40,000 Norwegians, 40,000 English, 35,000 Russians, 30,000 French, and 20,000 Italians.

The greatest event in the history of Chicago was the Great Fire, as it is termed, which broke out on the evening of Oct. 8, 1871. The total area of the land burned over was 2100 acres. Nearly 18,000 buildings were consumed. The lives lost were 200, and the grand total of values destroyed is estimated at $200,000,000. The World's Columbian Exposition was held in the city in 1893, on a site in Jackson Park.

Chicago, a post-village of Marion co., Ky., on the Louisville and Nashville R., 55 miles SSE. of Louisville. Pop. about 225.

Chicago, a banking post-town of Huron co., Ohio, on the Chicago division of the Baltimore and Ohio R., 28 miles S. of Sandusky. It has milling- and other industries, natural gas, etc. Pop. in 1900, 2348.

Chicago Park, a post-office of Nevada co., Cal.

Chicago Ridge, a post-village of Cook co., Ill., on the Wabash and the Chicago Terminal Transfer Rs. The banking point is Chicago. It has manufactures of slot-machines. Pop. about 300.

Chicago River, Ill., a small stream which runs through the city of Chicago and connects with Lake Michigan. It is formed by the North and South Branches, which unite about 1 mile from the lake. A connection has been opened between the South Branch and the Illinois River, at LaSalle, by means of the Illinois and Michigan

Canal, and between the South Branch and the Des Plaines River (an affluent of the Illinois) at Lockport by means of the navigable Chicago Drainage Canal, so that the current is reversed, and water from the lake flows through the Illinois River into the Mississippi. A great part of the sewage of the city of Chicago is by means of these united waters thrown into the Mississippi.

Chicapa, a town of Mexico, state of Oaxaca, 25 miles E. by N. of Tehuantepec, on a river of the same name. In its environs are silver-mines, at one time important.

Chichagof Harbor, a port in the island of Attu, Aleutian Islands, Alaska. Lat. 52° 55' N.; lon. 186° 47' W.

Chichester, chitch'es-ter (anc. Reg'num), a municipal borough and episcopal city of England, capital of West Sussex, situated near the English Channel, 14 miles ENE. of Portsmouth and 28 miles W. of Brighton. It stands on a plain between the South Downs and the sea. Its ancient walls have been converted into terraces with shaded walks. At the intersection of the two principal streets is an elegant octagonal cross, the so-called Market Cross, erected about the close of the fifteenth century. The mediæval cathedral is a well-proportioned and handsome edifice, mainly in the Norman style, 410 feet in length. Its spire, which collapsed in 1861, was rebuilt in 1861-66. This church has a detached campanile, or bell-tower. In the interior are a richly adorned choir, portraits of all the sovereigns of England from the time of the Conquest, with other historical paintings, and numerous monuments, including some fine works of art by Flaxman. S. of the cathedral is a quadrangle enclosed by cloisters and near it is the bishop's palace. The church of St. Paul's is a handsome modern building. The guild hall is a portion of an ancient friary. Chichester communicates with the sea by a canal. The town was originally a Roman station. The name is said to be a contraction of Cisancoaster, the castle of Cissa, a South Saxon king. It was the capital of the kingdom of Sussex till its conquest by the West Saxons. Various Roman remains, with inscriptions, have been discovered in the city and vicinity. Until 1885 the town was a parliamentary borough. Pop. in 1901, 12,244.

Chichester, a post-hamlet of Merrimack co., N.H., in Chichester township (town), on the Boston and Maine R., 8 miles ENE. of Concord. The town is drained by the Suncook River. Pop. in 1900, 598.

Chignolo, keen-yo'lo, a town of Italy, in Lombardy, 16 miles ENE. of Pavia. Pop. about 3000 (commune, 5000).

Chigonaise (she'go'nair') or Ishgonish River, a post-village of Colchester co., Nova Scotia, near the head of Cobequid Bay, 13 miles from Truro.

Chiguanupám, a town of Mexico, in the state of Puebla, 55 miles N. by E. of the city of Puebla.

Chigwell, a village of Essex, England, 13 miles NE. of London.

Chihuahua, che-wá-wá, a city of Mexico, capital of the state of Chihuahua, on the Mexican Central R., 325 miles S. by E. of El Paso. Lat. 28° 40' N.; lon. 106° 8' W. It is well planned, with broad and clean streets. There is a good water-supply. The town has a noble church, a fine plaza, a mint, and a prison, and is an important centre of trade and mining enterprise, with cotton- and woollen-mills. Elevation, 4635 feet. Pop. in 1900, 30,405. Hidalgo and Allende, leaders in the revolution of 1810, were executed here.

Chihuahua, a state of Mexico, bounded on the N. by New Mexico and on the E., in part, by Texas, from which it is separated by the Rio Grande. Area, 89,775 sq. m. It is the largest of the Mexican states in area. Its eastern portion forms part of the great central plateau of Mexico and has on the border with Coahuila the depression known as the Bolsón de Mapimí. It is traversed on the W. by ridges of the Sierra Madre or Mexican Cordillera (Sierra Tarahumara), and contains great tracts of inarable land, but is well adapted to stock-raising and has much and varied mineral wealth (gold, silver, copper), as yet only partially developed, but showing extraordinary richness. The principal river is the Conchos, but the state is also watered by the Mayo and Rio del Fuerte and their tributaries. Cotton and the vine, besides various fruits, are cultivated in some parts. The climate is dry, mostly hot in the summer time, but cold in winter on the uplands. Capital, Chihuahua. Pop. in 1900, 327,004, mostly Indians and mestizos.

Chikalda, a hill-station and sanitarium of British India, in Berar, about 45 miles NW. of Amraoti. Elevation, 3656 feet.

Chikiri, or Tchikiri, chee-kee'ree', a river of the Chinese Empire, Manchuria, rises on the confines of Siberia and, after a course of about 450 miles, falls into the Amur a little above Saghalin-Ula.

Chikishliar. See TCHIKISHLIAR.

Chikotan, Tchikotan, chee-ko-tán', or Spanberg, spán'bérge, the southernmost of the Kuril Isles.

Chikwawa, a town and station of Nyassaland, Africa, on the Shire, 21 miles SW. of Blantyre.

Chilapa, che-lá-pá, and Chilapilla, che-lá-peel'yá (i.e., "Little Chilapa"), two rivers of Mexico, state of Tabasco, tributary to the river Tabasco, which they join from the E.

Chilapa, a town of Mexico, in the state of Guerrero, 125 miles S. by W. of Mexico. Pop. in 1895, 8256.

Chilatjap, a seaport and railroad station on the S. shore of the island of Java, 170 miles (direct) SE. of Batavia.

Chilaw', a town of Ceylon, on its western coast, 45 miles N. of Colombo. There are pearl-fisheries in the neighboring waters. Pop. about 3000.

Chilen, cheel'ká, a town of Peru, on the Pacific Ocean, 40 miles SE. of Lima. Near it are remains of ancient edifices.

Childersburg, a post-town of Talladega co., Ala., 1 mile from the Coosa River and 14 miles by rail SW. of Talladega. Pop. in 1900, 372.

Childress, a county in the NW. part of Texas. Area, 660 sq. m. It is watered by forks of the Red River and tributaries of the Pearl River. Capital, Childress. Pop. in 1890, 1175; in 1900, 2138.

Childress, a banking post-town, capital of Childress co., Tex., is 8 miles S. of the Red River and on the Fort Worth and Denver City R., 106 miles by rail NW. of Wichita Falls. Pop. in 1900, 692.

Childs, a post-village of Cecil co., Md., 7 miles by rail W. of Newark. Pop. 200.

Childs, a post-village of Wilkin co., Minn., 27 miles by rail S. of Brokenridge.

Childs, a hamlet of Mitchell co., N.C., 23 miles N. of Marion.

Childwall, a village in the eastern outskirts of Liverpool. Here is Childwall Hall, the property of the Marquis of Salisbury.

Childwold, a post-village and resort of St. Lawrence co., N.Y. The banking point is Potsdam. Pop. 90.

Chile, or Chili, chil'lee (Sp. Chile, chee'lá), a republic of South America, extending as a narrow strip of land between the Andes on the E. and the Pacific on the W. and southward from the boundary of Peru, in about lat. 17° 30' S., to Cape Horn, thus covering nearly 39 degrees of latitude, or 2700 miles. Its political boundaries on the E. are Bolivia (in the N.) and the Argentine Republic (with Patagonia), the latter retaining possession of the eastern half of the island of Tierra del Fuego. The Strait of Magellan is considered neutral territory. The Andean boundary-line, which in a general way coincides with the crest or water-parting of the main mountain-system, although shaped by various conventions, has not yet been definitely located in all parts. The width of the country, while it expands, with its islands, to the extreme of about 250 miles, hardly exceeds on an average 100 miles. The republic is divided into 23 provinces and 1 territory (Magallanes) and has an area of about 290,000 sq. m. and a population (in 1900) of about 3,500,000, including some 450,000 not enumerated in the census returns. The populations were as follows:

Provinces and Territory.	Pop. in 1900.	Provinces and Territory.	Pop. in 1900.
Aconcagua .....	128,498	Llanquihue .....	91,408
Antofagasta .....	49,820	Magallanes (Territory) .....	6,419

Face of the Country, etc.—Chile is properly divisible into three regions: 1. The region N. of Copiapó, comprised mainly in the provinces of Tacna, Tarapacá, and Antofagasta, with steppe-like plains and pampas, rising progressively to the foot of the main mountains. In this region, in some parts of which there is no rainfall for years at a time and where desert conditions largely prevail, there are numerous salines (salinas) and nitrate basins (salitreras), which, together with other minerals, contribute fortunately to the wealth of a territory which is barred from the benefits of agricultural possibilities. The so-called Atacama desert, with its enormous mineral wealth, lies in this tract. 2. The second or central region of Chile is traversed from N. to S. by the ranges of the Andes, of which there are, as in other parts of the system, two main parallel chains, which enclose between them the table-land that is commonly described as the central valley of Chile. The southern portion of this included highland is of a lacustrine nature, and E. and S. of Valdivia a number of large lakes still remain, which physiographically connect with the third region—that of the fragmented and submerged Andes, of which the distinguishing features are the large number of coast-islands, with their intercommunicating waters, and the deep fjords which enter the continental main. This formation, which includes Chiloé, the Chonos, Taytao, Campana, and Queen Adelaide archipelagoes, etc., continues to the extremity of the continent.

Among the loftiest summits of the Chilean Andes, the greater number of which are extinct and dismantled volcanoes, are: Tupungato (craterless, like its superior, Aconcagua), 23,000 feet; Cerro del Mercedario, 22,000 ft.; Lillayacu, 21,500 ft.; Antofalla, 20,900 ft.; Asupe de Copiapó, 19,700 ft.; Juncal, 20,500 ft.; Parinao, 20,950 ft.; and Pomarapé (still smoking), 20,500 ft. Aconcagua, whose base is partly in Chile, has its summit (23,080 ft.) in the Argentine Republic. Among the highest peaks of Fugia are Sarmiento, 6910 ft., and Darwin, 6800 ft. The Chilean Andes are more heavily clad in snow than any other part of the system, and they radiate out numerous glaciers, especially in the south, where some descend into the Pacific fjords. There are a number of lofty passes, as the Arafre, 11,970 ft.; Los Patos, a few miles to the N. of Aconcagua, 11,700 ft.; and the famous Cumbre, or Uspallata Pass, a few miles SW. of Aconcagua, 12,795 ft.—the gateway of the Argentine-Chilean transcontinental railway. The mountains, like the great valley, fall off in height southward.

The rivers of Chile are directed in the main westward across the country, falling off rapidly from the Andean heights. There are none of any great size, the Bio-Bio, with a length of perhaps 250 miles, being the largest and longest. Other streams are the Maule, Imperial, and Valdivia.

Climate and Productions.—From the tropical heat of the rainless region of Atacama to the perpetual winter of Cape Horn, every variety of climate is found in Chile. In the N. the climate of the coast is subtropical; but in the interior the mountains tower far above the snow-line, and from them flow torrents which to some extent compensate for the lack of rain. Southward of Chiló the climate is excessively wet. The territory of Magallanes is too wet for the growth of cereals, but root-crops and garden-products thrive to perfection. Chiló, Llanquihue, Valdivia, and Arauco have a climate that has been compared with that of Great Britain. That of the central valley is markedly healthy and pleasant, the mercury rarely rising above 77°–78° or falling below the freezing-point. In the northern provinces there may be no rainfall for 30 years or more, and even at Copiapo the annual rainfall is sometimes restricted to a single day. On the other hand, at Valdivia, nearly 100 inches have been known to fall in 150 days, and at Cape Horn, where the number of rainy days in the year is about 300, 100 inches have been noted in 40 days.

The crops are those of the temperate zone generally. In the N. agriculture is only practised where irrigation can be effected. Live-stock and alfalfa are exported from the north; potatoes, flax, rye, barley, honey, wax, jerked beef, leather, hides, fruit, flour, walnuts, and wheat from the central part; and timber, potatoes, apples, etc., from the southern provinces. Of the native trees a large proportion is made up of the evergreens. The Fitzroya Patagonica, called cedar, is the principal timber tree. Other noteworthy trees are the Araucanian pine; the Fagus obliqua, a beech, here misnamed oak (roble); and the quillaya, whose detergent bark is not unknown in commerce. The European poplar and the Australian blue-gum (Eucalyptus) have been acclimatised.

The animals include the puma, vicuña, guanaco, chinchilla (at elevations of 12,000 feet and over), sea-otter, and several species of deer, including the diminutive pudu, with many species of birds, among which are the condor, American ostrich, cape-pigeon, parrots, and albatross. Chile has no venomous reptiles and the streams are almost destitute of fishes.

The mineral wealth is very great. Gold is obtained chiefly from river-sands (placers), but the yield is not very large, amounting to 3000–4000 lbs. per year. The silver product is considerably larger. Copper-ores are widely distributed and they constitute, after the nitrates, the most important mineral resource of the country. The output of this ore amounted in 1902 to 69,258 metric tons, or 11,500 metric tons of the reduced metal. Cobalt and nickel are also mined. Zinc, iron, bismuth, mercury, alabaster, and lapis lazuli are found. Saliter or cubic nitre (sodium nitrate) and crude borax are abundant in the extreme north. The nitrate deposits are estimated to cover an area of 225,000 acres and yield an annual product of about 1,300,000 tons, the workings giving employment in 1902 to 24,538 hands. Southward from lat. 36° 50' S. coal is very abundant. It is largely worked, being a good steam-coal and very serviceable in smelting-works, though classed as a Tertiary lignite. Copper-ores are largely shipped to Europe, but copper and silver also are now extensively reduced in Chile.

Manufactures (other than the smelting of ores and the production of glass, leather, soap, flour, sugar, and the like) are not extensive, but have received considerable attention of late. Agriculture and stock-raising are the leading pursuits, the annual production of the cereals being about 35,000,000 bushels (wheat, 28,000,000). There were in 1902 nearly 2800 miles of railway in operation, with many new lines projected.

The population of Chile consists chiefly of whites of Spanish descent, Indians, and mestizos. The pure Spaniards constitute a minority. Many of the inhabitants represent a mixture of European, Indian, and Negro blood. The Spanish language everywhere prevails. The Roman Catholic church is sustained at public cost, but other churches are tolerated. There is a system of public schools, with a national or state university at Santiago. Daily and weekly newspapers are published in almost every large town. Chile is one of the most prosperous of the South American countries, and is among the most favored in natural resources. In energy and enterprise the Chileans surpass the other peoples of Spanish South America. In the southern-central provinces there are many German, French, English, and some American colonists. A most interesting people of southern Chile proper are the Indians of Araucania. (See ARAUCANIA.) Still further south are the Fuegians.

The government of Chile is administered by a president, who is elected for a term of five years, assisted by a cabinet or ministry (constructed of seven departments, under 6 ministers) and a council of state composed of 11 members, 5 of whom are nominated by the president. The legislative power is vested in a National Congress, consisting of a Senate and a House of Representatives. The members of the Senate are elected by the provinces, the election being direct, and serve six years. The members of the lower house are elected for a term of three years.

Chile rose against the Spanish rule in 1810 and achieved her liberation by the victory at Maipo in 1818. The war waged with Peru and Bolivia in 1879–83 resulted in the acquisition of the Bolivian coastland and the southern extremity of Peru. The chief cities are Santiago, the capital, with a population (Dec. 31, 1901) of 296,645; Valparaíso, 132,941; Concepción, 49,227; Talca, 39,112; Iquique, Chilán, Valdivia, Copiapó, and Coquimbo.

Chilecito, che-ik-see'to, a mining town of the Argentine Republic, province and 40 miles W. by N. of La Rioja, in the Famatina valley. It is connected by railroad with Cordova.

Chiles, a post-village of Miami co., Kan., on the Missouri Pacific R. Pop. about 100.

Chilesburg, chil's'búrg, a post-hamlet of Fayette co., Ky., 9 miles by rail E. of Lexington.

Chilesburg, a post-hamlet of Caroline co., Va., about 38 miles N. by W. of Richmond.

Chil'how'ee, a mountain-ridge of Blount co., East Tennessee, about 30 miles S. of the city of Knoxville. Iron-ore abounds here.

Chilhowee, a post-village of Johnson co., Mo., about 50 miles SE. of Kansas City. Pop. about 130.

Chilhowee, a post-hamlet and valley of Blount co., Tenn., about 36 miles S. of Knoxville. The valley is intersected by the Little Tennessee River.

Chilhowie, a post-village of Smyth co., Va., on the Norfolk and Western R. Pop. about 150.

Chi-li, chee-lee, for foreigners often written Pe-chi-li, the northeasternmost province of China proper, bordering on Mongolia, Manchuria, and the Gulf of Pe-chi-li. Area, about 100,000 sq. m. A large part of it lies beyond the Great Wall. Mountain ranges traverse the northern and western parts. The rest of the province is an alluvial plain watered by the Pei-ho, Hun-ho, Lwan-ho, and other rivers. Chi-li contains deposits of coal and iron. The soil yields bountiful crops of cereals, and also produces cotton, sugar, and indigo. Peking is situated in this province. The seat of administration is Pao-ting-fu. Chi-li has two treaty ports, Tien-tsin and Chin-wang-tao. There is a considerable mileage of railways. Pop. about 20,000,000.

Chili, chil'le, a post-village of Hancock co., Ill., about 28 miles NE. of Quincy.

Chili, a post-village of Miami co., Ind., on the El River and on the Wabash R., 21 miles ENE. of Logansport. Pop. about 300.

Chili, a post-township (town) of Monroe co., N.Y., about 8 miles SW. of Rochester, is bounded on the E. by the Genesee River. Chili station is on the New York Central and Hudson River R., 59 miles from Buffalo. Pop. of the town in 1900, 2099.

Chili, a post-village of Coshocton co., Ohio, 10 miles NE. of Coshocton. Pop. 175.

Chili, a post-village of Clark co., Wis., on the Chicago, Minneapolis, St. Paul and Omaha R. Pop. about 100.

Chili Center, a hamlet of Monroe co., N.Y., in Chili township (town), 3 miles from Chili station.

Chilicothe. See CHILLICOTHE.

Chillilaya, an inland port of Bolivia, on Lake Titicaca, near its SE. extremity.

Chili Station, a post-station of Monroe co., N.Y., on the New York Central and Hudson River R., 10 miles WSW. of Rochester.

Chil'ka Lake, a lagoon of British India, at the S. extremity of Orissa. Its low-water area is about 350 sq. m., and its maximum depth at this stage is about 6 feet. It contains some inhabited islands, and its W. shore is mountainous. Its banks are studded with hamlets, whose inhabitants are employed in extensive salt-works.

Chil'kat, or Klukwan, a post-village of Alaska, at the head of the Lynn Canal, on the peninsula separating Chilkat and Chilkoot Inlets. It has a cannery, stores, and a few other buildings.

Chilkat Inlet, the W. branch of the terminal portion of the Lynn Canal, Alaska, running NW. from about lat. 59° 10' N. (and receiving at the head the Chilkat River), through which the Chilkat Pass (lat. 60° N.; 3100 feet altitude) and the Dalton Trail to the Klondike region are reached. It is in the territory for some time disputed between the United States and Canada.

Chil'koot or Taya (Dyea) Inlet, Alaska, the E. branch of the head of the Lynn Canal, running N. from about lat. 59° 10' N. At the upper end are the towns of Skagway and Dyea. It receives the Skagway and Taya rivers. North of it are the White and Chilkoot passes, through which the Yukon and the Klondike region are reached. By some geographers only the upper portion of the Chilkoot Inlet is designated Taya Inlet.

Chilkoot Pass, in the Kotuk or Coast Mountains of southeastern Alaska (in the territory for some time disputed between the United States and Canada), has an altitude of 3500 feet. It is on the route to the Klondike region and across the ridge separating the head-waters of the Yukon (Lewes) River from the tributaries of the Lynn Canal. It is wildly desolate in its upper parts and markedly abrupt along its southern face. It was the scene of great hardship and struggle in the early period of the Klondike excitement, but its function has virtually ceased since the completion of the railroad across the neighboring White Pass. An aerial telephage road was built over the pass in 1898.

Chil'jambaram (entered in the British census as Chidambaram), a town of British India, in the Carnatic, on the coast, 36 miles S. of Pondicherry. In the vicinity are large ancient Hindu temples. Pop. about 20,000.

Chillán, cheel-yán, a town of Chile, capital of the province of Nuble, 55 miles (direct) E. by N. of Concepción, with which it is connected by rail. It is a thriving place, with wide streets, and has a trade in cattle, grain, and hand-made lace. Pop. in 1899, 35,052. Elevation, 700 feet. About 44 miles to the SE. are the sulphur-baths of Chillán.

Chillán Viejo (ve-á-yo), a town of Chile, in the province of Nuble, close to Chillán. Pop. 4800.

Chillauwal'ia, a village of British India, in the Punjab, near the Jhelum, about 30 miles NW. of Gujrat. It is memorable for the battle fought there between the British and the Sikhs, Jan. 13, 1849.

Chillicothe, chil-le-kōth'ee, a banking city of Peoria co., Ill., on the Illinois River, at the head of Peoria Lake, and on the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific and the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Rrs., 18 miles NNE. of Peoria. It has manufactures of carriages, pearl buttons, etc., and has an extensive trade in grain. Pop. in 1900, 1699.

Chillicothe, a post-town of Wapello co., Iowa, on the Des Moines River and on the Burlington Route, 8 miles NW. of Ottumwa. Pop. in 1900, 216.

Chillicothe, a city of Missouri, and the capital of Livingston co., is on the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy and other railroads, 95 miles NE. of Kansas City. It is the seat of the Missouri Industrial School for Girls and a normal school, and has manufactures of carriages and wagons, staves, boxes, etc. It is a shipping point for produce, wool, and hides. Pop. in 1890, 5717; in 1900, 6905.

Chillicothe, a city of Ohio, and the capital of Ross co., is pleasantly situated on the right bank of the Scioto River and on the Ohio Canal and the Baltimore and Ohio South-western and other railroads, 50 miles S. of Columbus. Its site is a fertile plain or valley bounded by verdant hills about 500 feet high. It contains a handsome court-house, public library, etc., and has railroad-shops, coaling industries, and manufactures of carriages, iron, leather, machinery, etc. Chillicothe was the capital of Ohio from 1800 to 1810. Pop. in 1900, 12,976.

Chillicothe, a post-village of Hardeman co., Tex., 13 miles by rail E. by S. of Quanah. Pop. 200.

Chillingham, a village of Northumberland, England, 11 miles NW. of Alnwick. Near by is Chillingham Castle. In its park is preserved a herd of wild white cattle.

Chillisquaque Creek, Pa., enters the West Branch of the Susquehanna River about 3 miles below Lewisburg.

Chilliwack, a banking post-village of New Westminster district, British Columbia. It has lumber- and pulp-industries. Pop. about 450.

Chillón, cheel-yón, a town of Spain, in New Castile, 56 miles SW. of Ciudad Real. Pop. about 2000.

Chillon, shil'lon (Fr. pron. shee'yón'), a castle of Switzerland, canton of Vaud, 6 miles SE. of Vevey, near the E. extremity of the Lake of Geneva, on an isolated rock, surrounded by deep water and connected with the mainland by bridge. It is said to have been built by Amadeus IV. of Savoy, in 1238, and was long a state prison. It has latterly been restored, and is now used as a historical museum and depository for archives. Bonnavard, prior of St. Victor, was confined here from 1530 to 1536, and the place has been rendered famous by Byron's "Prisoner of Chillon."

Chilmark, a post-township (town) of Dukes co., Mass., is in the SW. part of the island of Martha's Vineyard. Pop. in 1900, 324.

Chilmary, chil-má'ree (Hindu, Chalamari), a town of Bengal, district and 40 miles SE. of Rungpur, on the Brahmaputra. It has a large trade in rice and jute.

Chilo, shí'lo, a post-village of Clermont co., Ohio, on the Ohio River, about 40 miles above Cincinnati. Pop. 200.

Chiloé, cheel-o-á' (almost chil-way'), an island of South America, on the W. coast of Chile, to which it belongs, forming part of a province of its own name. It is separated from the mainland by the Gulf of Ancud and Corcovado Bay, and by a strait not more than a mile in width. It is 160 miles in length from N. to S., and about 35 in breadth at the widest part. It is mountainous and covered with forests. The W. shores are composed of rocky masses rising abruptly from the ocean to the height of from 1500 to 3000 feet; the E. shores are of moderate elevation. The climate is temperate, but exceedingly moist; the soil is a rich sandy loam. The chief products are wheat, barley, potatoes, etc.; apples and other fruits are also cultivated. Cattle, sheep, and swine are reared. Much timber is exported. Coal-beds of value exist. The population consists of whites of Spanish descent, aboriginal Indians, and people of mixed breed, who constitute the bulk of the inhabitants. There are several small, good harbors on the eastern side. The island was discovered by the Spaniards in 1558. Castro, the ancient capital, was founded in 1566. The Chiloé Archipelago consists of upward of 60 small islands, several of which are well cultivated. The province of Chiloé includes the opposite littoral of the mainland, the Chonos Islands, and a portion of the peninsula of Taitao. Pop. in 1900, 91,122. Capital, Ancud.

Chilón, che-lón', a village of Bolivia, 120 miles SW. of Santa Cruz de la Sierra.

Chilpancingo, cheel-pán-sin'go, a town of Mexico, capital of the state of Guerrero, on the route of the Acapulco railway, 120 miles S. by W. of the city of Mexico. Pop. in 1895, 6312. The town was badly wrecked by an earthquake in Jan., 1902.

Chillsow, a post-village of Livingston co., Mich. Pop. 75.

Chiltepec, cheel-tá-pék', an arm of the river Tabasco, Mexico, leaves the main stream at San Juan Bautista, and, after a northern course of 70 miles, enters the Gulf of Mexico 30 miles SW. of Frontera.

Chil'tern, a mining village of Bogong co., Victoria, Australia, on Black Dog Creek, 168 miles NE. of Melbourne, with which it is connected by rail.

Chil'tern Hills, a range of chalk hills in England, traversing the S. part of the co. of Buckingham and extending from Goring, in Oxfordshire, to Tring, in the co. of Hertford. Breadth, from 15 to 20 miles. Height of principal summit, near Wendover, 885 feet above the sea. The stewardship of the Chiltern Hundreds is a nominal office bestowed upon a member of parliament who wishes to resign, a member of parliament being disqualified from holding his seat by the acceptance of a place of honor and profit under the crown.

Chilton, a county in the central part of Alabama, is bounded on the E. by the Coosa River. Area, 703 sq. m. Capital, Clanton. Pop. in 1890, 14,549; in 1900, 16,522.

Chilton, a post-village of Falls co., Tex., 23 miles by rail S. of Waco. Pop. about 225.

Chilton, a banking city, capital of Calumet co., Wis., on a branch of the Manitowoc River and on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul R., 79 miles NW. of Milwaukee. It has manufactures of carriages, ploughs, sash, blinds, etc. Pop. in 1900, 1460.

Chilton, a township (town) of Calumet co., Wis. Pop. in 1900, 350.

Chiltons, a post-village of Westmoreland co., Va. Pop. about 150.

Chiltonville, a post-village of Plymouth co., Mass., on the sea-coast, 2 miles SE. of Plymouth.

Chilvers Coton, a small town of England, in Warwickshire, 7 miles N. of Coventry. It is the birthplace of George Eliot.

Chilwa, less properly Shirwa, a former lake of east-central Africa, in about lat. 17° S.; lon. 36° E., lying E. of the Shiré River. It was about 50 miles in length, but shallow. It was dry in 1903.

Chimaltenango, che-mál-tá-nán'go, a central department of Guatemala. The country is fertile and well watered, and some gold is found in the streams. Capital, Chimaitenango. Pop. about 60,000.

Chimaitenango, a town of the republic of Guatemala, 23 miles W. by N. of the city of Guatemala. Pop. about 3600.

Chimara, kee-má'rá, a small seaport of Albania, on the Strait of Otranto, 22 miles NW. of Delvino.

Chimay, shee-má', a town of Belgium, in Hainaut, on the Blanche, 32 miles SE. of Mons. It has a noble castle and park of the princes of Chimay and a monument to Froissart. There are iron-works and noted marble-quarries. Pop. in 1900, 3480.

Chimbe, a mining town of Coquimbo, Chile. Pop. 1200.

Chimbarongo, a town (and river) of Chile, in the province of Colchagua. Pop. 2400.

Chimbo, cheem-bo, a town of Ecuador, in a valley of the same name, and on the Chimbo River, in the Andes, at the foot of Chimborazo mountain, and 35 miles NE. of Guayaquil, with which it is connected by rail.

Chimborazo, chim-bo-rá'zo (Sp. pron. cheem-bo-rá'-tho), a famous mountain of Ecuador, 90 miles S. by W. of Quito and 120 miles from the coast. Lat. 1° 29' S.; lon. 79° 5' W. It was long believed to be the highest summit of the Andes, but is now known to be surpassed by at least seven other peaks of Chile, the Argentine Republic, Bolivia, and Peru (Aconcagua, Sorata or Illimani, Illimani, Tupungato, etc.). The height, as determined by Whimper, is 20,498 feet above sea-level; but above the valley of Quito it only rises 12,000 feet, a height not quite equal to that of Mont Blanc above the valley of Chamouni. This vast mountain, an extinct crater-like volcano, with summit-glaciers, presents a magnificent spectacle when seen from the shores of the Pacific Ocean. It was ascended in 1802 by Humboldt and Bonpland to the height, estimated by them, of 19,286 feet, in 1831 by Bousingsault and Hall to the height of 19,695 feet, and in 1889 by Whimper to the top.

Chimborazo, an Andean province of Ecuador southward of the mountain of the same name. Area, 5544 sq. m. Pop., exclusive of the Indians, about 122,000. Capital, Riobamba.

Chimbote, cheem-bo'tá, a seaport of Peru, department of Ancachs, in about lat. 9° 10' S., the starting-point of the railroad to Huancayo. It has a fine iron pier and a good roadstead in Ferrol Bay. The valley of Chimbote has many ancient ruins.

Chimapanipestick, sheem-pá-neep-steek', a river of Quebec, falls into the Gulf of St. Lawrence on the N. side, about 20 miles SW. of Seven Islands Bay.

Chimkent, a town of Russian Turkestan. See TCHIM-KENT.

Chimney Island, an island in the river St. Lawrence, 5 miles below Prescott, Ontario.

Chimneypoint, a post-station of Addison co., Vt., on Lake Champlain, 3 miles from Port Henry, N.Y.

Chimneyrock, a post-village of Park co., Mont. Pop. about 275.

Chimneyrock, a post-township of Rutherford co., N.C., 20 miles S. of Old Fort station. Pop. in 1900, 1556.

China. See CHINESE EMPIRE.

China, a post-village of China township (town), Kennebec co., Me., is on a lake of the same name and on the Wisconsin and Quebec R., 18 miles NE. of Augusta. The town has various manufactures. Pop. of the town in 1900, 1380.

China, a town of Mexico, in the state of Nuevo León, 60 miles E. by N. of Monterrey.

Chinab, a river of British India. See CHENAB.

Chinastat, a post-hamlet of Humboldt co., Cal.

Chinagrove, a post-village of Pike co., Ala., 16 miles N. of Troy. Pop. 200.

Chinagrove, a post-hamlet of Pike co., Miss., 12 miles E. of Holmesville.

Chinagrove, a banking post-village of Rowan co., N.C., 16 miles by rail S. of Salisbury. It has cotton- and roller-mills. Pop. in 1900, 887.

Chinahill, a post-hamlet of Telfair co., Ga., 20 miles SW. of McRae.

Chinameca, a town of Salvador, department and 12 miles W. by N. of San Miguel.

Chinampo, Korea. See CHINWAMPO.

Chinandega, che-nán-dá'gá, a department in the W. part of Nicaragua. It is bounded on the W. and SW. by the Pacific Ocean and partly on the N. by the Gulf of Fonseca, and is intersected by the Rio Negro and its tributaries. Capital, Chinandega. At its western extremity is the destructive volcano Cosagua. Pop. about 25,000.

Chinandega, a town of Nicaragua, capital of the department of Chinandega, 24 miles NW. of León, with which it is connected by rail. Pop. about 11,000. It has a fair commerce and is also united to its port, Corinto, by railroad.

China Sea is that portion of the Pacific Ocean which extends between China and the island of Formosa on the N., the Philippine Islands on the E., Borneo on the S., and the Malay Peninsula and French Indo-China on the W. It forms the great gulfs of Siam and Tongking. Chief affluents are the Menam, Mekong, Song-koi (Red River), and Si-kiang rivers. Chief ports, Canton, Hong Kong, Manila, Saigon, Bangkok, and Singapore. Greatest depth, 14,250 feet.

China Spring, a post-village of McLennan co., Tex. Pop. about 200.

China Straits separate Papua, on the SE., from the outlying eastern islets.

Chincha, chin'cha, or Chincha Baja, a small seaport town of Peru, department and 115 miles SSE. of Lima. It is situated at the mouth of the Chincha River, on which, a short distance inland, is Chincha Alta, a town with about 4000 inhabitants.

Chincha Islands, a group of three small islands in the Pacific Ocean, off the coast of Peru, about 14 miles from the shore. Lat. 13° 38' S.; lon. 76° 28' W. These islands, so noted for their guano, have been worked out and no longer afford that commodity.

Chinchilla, chin-cheel'yá (anc. Sala'ria), a city of Spain, 9 miles SE. of Albacete. It has an old castle and is surrounded by walls. Pop. in 1900, 6680.

Chin'chil'la, a post-village of Lackawanna co., Pa., 5 miles by rail N. of Scranton. Pop. about 300.

Chinchón, cheen-chón', a town of Spain, 25 miles SSE. of Madrid. Pop. about 5000.

Chin-chow, chin-chá'oo, a city of China, province of Ho-nan, 80 miles SSE. of Kai-fung.

Chin-chow, or Shin-chow, a city of China, province of Hu-nan, on the Yuen-kiang, 110 miles WSW. of Lake Tung-ting-hu.

Chimcorro, or El Chimcorro, el cheen-kor'no, a reef off the E. coast of Yucatan, 110 miles S. of Cozumel Island.

Chincooteague (ching'ko-teeg'; local pron. jing-go-tig') Island, a banking post-station of Accomac co., Va., is on an island of its own name, which is in the Atlantic Ocean, separated from the mainland by Chincooteague Sound. This island is famed for its oysters and for its breed of ponies. Pop. about 2900.

Chindari, a town of British India. See CHANDERI.

Chinde, a port of Portuguese East Africa, at the mouth of the Chinde River, one of the estuarine branches of the Zambezi.

Chindwara, chind-wá'rá, written also Sindwara (native, Ahindwara), a town of British India, capital of a district, 65 miles N. of Nagpur. It is a summer-resort for Europeans. Pop. about 10,000.

Chindwara, a district of the Central Provinces, British India. It is a diversified, pleasant, and fertile region. Capital, Chindwara.

Chindwin', or Kyendwin', the principal tributary of the Irrawadi. It rises in the Patkoi Hills, flows through Upper Burma in a southerly direction, and enters the Irrawadi from the right, between Mandalay and Pagan, after a course of about 500 miles, for much of which it is navigable in the wet season.

Chinendega, Nicaragua. See CHINANDEGA.

Chinese Camp, a post-village of Tuolumne co., Cal., about 50 miles E. by S. of Stockton.

Chinese Empire, a vast dominion of central and eastern Asia, comprising China proper, Mongolia (with its westward extension, Eastern or Chinese Turkestan), Manchuria, and Tibet, and extending from the Pamir to the Pacific Ocean, across nearly 60 degrees of longitude, and from the island of Hainan in the S. (the southern limit of China proper), in about lat. 18° N., to the Amur (in a region virtually under Russian domination), in approximately lat. 53° 50' N. The area covered by this vast territory is calculated to be 4,300,000 sq. m., containing a population of perhaps 350,000,000. Korea, over which China exercised the rights of suzerainty until 1895, is now under control of Japan; while Formosa, as a result of the disastrous war with Japan in 1894-95, has become a part of the Mikado's empire. The dominant physiographic features of the Chinese Empire are its lofty mountains (Himalayas, Kuen-lun, Tian-Shan, Altai), elevated plateaus (Tibet), the great Gobi or Shamo Desert, lowland coastal plains of China proper, and mighty rivers (Yang-tse-kiang, Hoang-ho, etc.). It contains the head-streams of the Brahmaputra, Indus, Ganges, Yenisei, Irtysh, and Amur, and the deep depression of Lukohun, near the Bogdo-Ola Mountains, nearly 400 feet below sea-level. See the articles under these various heads, and for a fuller reference to the general physiographic features of climate, etc., MANCHURIA, MONGOLIA, TIBET, etc.

CHINA PROPER (known to the ancient Greeks and Romans as the land of the Seres, whence Serice and Serica, and of the Sina; to the Arabs, from ancient times, as Sin, perhaps the original of the classical Sina; to the Europeans, in the latter part of the Middle Ages, from the time of Marco Polo, and later, as Cathay, a name derived from the race called Khitan, or Ki-tah, which held sway in China some centuries before the age of Marco Polo; to the Russians and generally to the inhabitants of central and northern Asia as Kitai, ke-ti, the original of the name Cathay; Chinese Chung Kwoh, the "Middle Kingdom," or Chung Hwa Kwoh, the "Middle Flowery Kingdom") constitutes the SE. portion of the Chinese Empire, occupying a third of its whole extent, and lying on the eastern slope of the table-lands of Central Asia. It covers an area of about 1,500,000 sq. m., and is inhabited by more than 300 millions of people (one-fifth of the total population of the globe), who live under the same government, are ruled by the same laws, speak dialects of the same language, and possess a greater homogeneity and a more enduring national existence than any other people of ancient or modern times. It is included between lat. 18° and 43° N. (which includes the island of Hainan) and lon. 98° and 124° E. Its coast-line is estimated to exceed 2500 miles, and the land-frontier 4400 miles. Its due north and south extent is about 1550 miles. China proper is divided into 18 provinces, as follows:

NORTH CHINA.	MIDDLE CHINA.	SOUTH CHINA.
Kan-su.	Kiang-su.	Che-kiang.
Shen-si.	Ngan-hwei.	Fo-kien.
Shan-si.	Ho-nan.	Kiang-si.
Chi-li.	Hu-pe.	Hu-nan.
Shan-tung.	Sze-chuen.	Kwang-tung.
		Kwang-si.
		Yun-nan.
		Kwei-chow.

Physical Features.—The land boundaries of China are Indo-China on the SW., the lofty plateau or mountain-tract of Tibet on the W., Mongolia on the N., and Manchuria on the NE. The contact of these countries, excepting in the case of Manchuria, is ruggedly abrupt, the land falling off towards China, especially in the W. and N., in steep escarpments or closely appressed and lofty mountain-ridges, a condition that has all but closed off China from the land side of the rest of Asia. Approach to it from the west is virtually permitted only by the "neck" between the Nan-shan mountains and the Great Wall, on what is known as the Lan-chow route, and through the narrow defiles of the upper Hoang-ho; and the passes leading from Mongolia, not excepting the Pekin-Kalgan route, are hardly more accessible. Even in the main mountain-tracts of the heart of China the rugged contour of the surface is such as hardly to permit of mountain-passages, and access to the different provinces is obtained mainly or exclusively by the river-channels or animal-paths.

In its broader physiographic aspect, China may be divided into three well-marked divisions: 1, that of the great plain, which stretches from the north of Pekin southward to the Bay of Hang-chow or beyond, and extends inland from the coast to a distance of 300-400 miles; 2, the region of lofty mountains, which occupies perhaps a full half of the entire country, and constitutes its whole western section; 3, the hill-country, indefinitely delimited in the S. and SE. A fourth (disjointed) region, composed of the elevated flat lands, basins, or valleys that are held up between bounding mountain-ranges,—such as the E. and W. valley of the Wei (tributary of the Hoang-ho), one of the most distinctive features of China; the parallelly-trending valley of the Han; and the fertile red basin of Yun-nan—may with propriety also be recognised. These valleys and basins occupy elevations of from 3000 to 7000 feet or more. The great plain above referred to is so low and uniformly graded that it is subject to frequent and disastrous inundations from the rivers that traverse it; the Hoang-ho, "China's Borrow," whose course has been altered about a dozen times in the period of 25 centuries, is responsible for incalculable devastation.

The relations of the mountain-systems of China proper are not as yet fully understood, either as regards their position in the main Asiatic system or in their inter-connection. The two chains or systems that are most definitely outlined are the Tsin-ling (or Tsinling-shan), with its eastern continuation, the Funiu-shan, in the north, having a generally E.-W. trend and defining on the south the courses of the Wei and eastern Hoang-ho; and the still very imperfectly known and improperly named Nan-shan, with a WSW.-ENE. course, in the south. The former, which is largely constructed of schists and gneisses, and flanked by ancient Paleozoic deposits, appears, geographically at least, to be a continuation of the Kuen-lun, or of the Marco Polo range. These mountains, like the southerly chain, give off numerous spurs and ramifications, which, with other mountains of less continuity or magnitude, help to divide the country into sectional areas of markedly severe relief. Their greatest elevation appears to be about 12,000 feet (Tapai-shan, 10,900 ft.). In the extreme NW. the Richt-hofen Mountains are seemingly the eastern continuation of the Altyn-Dagh. The mountains of Sze-chuen and Yun-nan, among which are the loftiest summits of the land (in the Hong-shan, 16,400 ft.; Kinting-shan, 18,000 ft.), are disposed in numerous N.-S. parallel ridges, which are manifestly a southerly deflection of the Himalaya system. Much of the high and mountainous land of northern China is constructed of the fine powdery, and in parts extremely fertile, material known as loess, the nature of which has been variously interpreted by geologists, but which is now generally assumed to be a wind-drift accumulation having its origin in the desert-tracts of the further north and north-west. This deposit has in places a thickness of several thousand feet and is carved into terrace-forms and deep and narrow gorges, with a resulting landscape of striking singularity.

Rivers and Lakes.—The rivers of China are comprised mainly in the systems of the Hoang-ho, in the north, the Yang-tse-kiang, in the centre, and the Si-kiang, in the south, the main streams having generally eastward courses. The Hoang-ho, which has a course estimated to be 2500 miles in length, is a shallow, circuitous, and almost unmanageable stream, difficult of navigation and of little commercial importance. It has fewer tributaries than almost any great river of the globe, and its displacements have at various times thrown the mouth of the stream alternately N. and S. of the Shan-tung peninsula. The Yang-tse-kiang is the main water-way of China, and both in its navigability and length of course (estimated to be nearly 3200 miles) is a river of the first magnitude. Its banks are studded with cities, towns, and villages, while its waters are crowded with craft in almost incredible numbers. (For detailed accounts of these rivers see HOANG-HO, YANG-TSE-KIANG, and SI-KIANG.) Other important rivers of China are the Min and Han, tributaries of the Yang-tse-kiang; the Wei, tributary of the Hoang-ho; the Pei-ho, or river of Tien-tsin, which drains the region of Peking; the Hun-ho, which joins the Pei-ho; and the Liao-ho, on the NE. border. China has no lakes of very great size, the largest being Tung-ting-hu (in the province of Hu-nan), with a length of about 60 miles, and Po-yang-hu (in Kiang-si),—both lying in the valley of the Yang-tse-kiang and connected with that river by means of short outlets; and the Tao-hu, Kao-yu-hu, and Hong-tse-hu, in the low drainage area between the mouths of the Hoang-ho and Yang-tse-kiang.

Climate.—In a country of such vast extent, extending from 18° to 43° N. lat., the climate must vary greatly. Indeed, as regards both climate and productions, China may be divided into three zones,—the northern, the central, and the southern. The northern zone extends to about the 33d parallel, and includes the 5 provinces of Shan-tung, Chi-li, Shan-si, Shen-si, and Kan-su. It produces the grains, fruits, and animals of northern Europe. Here the extremes of heat and cold are great. The winters are very severe, and at that season thick ice renders the rivers un-navigable. Among the productions of the northern provinces are maize, wheat, barley, oats, apples, the hazel-nut, and the potato; they are also rich in wood and minerals. The central zone, the richest portion of China, embraces either in whole or in greater part the 8 provinces of Sze-chuen, Kwei-chow, Hu-nan, Hu-pe, Kiang-si, Ngan-hwei, Ho-nan, and Kiang-su, extending southward in its furthest point to about lat. 26° or 25°. Tea and silk are its characteristic products; the middle portion is the granary of China, and the eastern part is celebrated for its manufactures of silk and cotton. Cotton is grown even in Manchuria. The southern zone embraces the 5 provinces of Yun-nan, Kwang-si, Kwang-tung, Fo-kien, and Che-kiang. The exchange of its tropical productions for those of the northern zone is an important branch of the internal commerce of the country. Much of this third zone lies within the tropics, and its climate and productions are alike tropical. Its fruits are oranges, lichees, mangoes, and bananas; rice is its staple grain, and the region produces the ground-nut, sweet potato, and yam. The mean annual temperature at Peking, which is situated on the 40th parallel of N. lat. (the parallel of Philadelphia), is 53.3°; the mean for July or August is about 79°, and for January 23.6°. The extremes of heat and cold are measured by about 90°. At Canton, in lat. 23° 15' N., the mean annual temperature is about 70°, the mercury rising in summer to 95° and falling in winter to 58°-59°. The rainfall is fairly abundant throughout the greater part of the land, and well meets the requirements of agriculture. Dry winds prevail during limited seasons, more particularly in the N., and at times deluge the country with fine dust. During the wet-season rains the rivers rise prodigiously, giving differences of level between low and high water of nearly 50 feet.

Vegetable Productions.—These are very varied, and, as has already been seen, combine elements belonging to both the tropical and boreal regions; the preponderating floral forms are, however, distinctly those of a subtropical or mild temperate zone, with numerous generic and specific types distinctive or characteristic of the region. The tea-plant is the most important vegetable production of China. The tallow-tree (Stillingia sebifera), the Dryandra cordata or varnish-tree, the camphor-tree, Chinese pine, Chinese banyan (Ficus nitida), the funeral cypress, and the silk mulberry are among the most important trees of China. The coconut and other palms flourish on the southern coast. Of the bamboo, which grows as far north as lat. 38°, there are numerous varieties; and it has been said that the bamboos of China are more valuable than her mines and, next to rice and silk, yield the greatest revenue. The ramie plant, from which grass-cloth is made, is an important product. Other plants, either indigenous or grown under cultivation, are the ginseng, indigo, cinnamon, rhubarb, wax-tree, chrysanthemum, and large water-lily (Nelumbium). The fruits of both the tropical and temperate zones—apple, grape, pomegranate, mango, pine-apple, orange, figs, loquat, etc.—are found in the country; and the camellia, azalea, and gardenia are natives of the "Flowery Land." Agriculture is held in higher estimation in China than perhaps in any other country in the world, and the opening labor day of the year is officially solemnized throughout the land. The agricultural system of the Chinese is rude but effective. Spade-husbandry and irrigation are carried on to a great extent. In the northern provinces the cereals are principally maize, barley, and wheat; but in the south rice is raised in vast quantities and forms the staple food of the people. Tobacco, sugar, and the poppy are also raised. In the northern or loess region, where the soil is of extreme fertility and where great expanses of flat country are found, cultivation is carried to a height of 8000 feet and more; but in the south the cultivated areas are mainly restricted to the low-lying plains and valleys and the artificially constructed basal terraces of the mountains. The chief tea-growing districts lie S. of the Yang-tze-kiang.

Animals.—The fauna of China, while it partakes most broadly of the characteristics of the general Eurasian, Holarctic, or temperate type, has in it a strong infusion of tropical or subtropical elements. The monkeys are represented by several specific forms, while the tiger is still found in the less-frequented western region (Yun-nan) and occasionally even in the tracts of general habitation. Most of the larger wild animals, such as the elephant, tapir, rhinoceros, etc., have long since been exterminated, or nearly so. Wild-cats are common in the forests of the south and bears and wolves are found in the hills. Of the ruminants there are the musk-deer and several other cervine species. The domestic stock animals, excepting the water-buffalo, are in most parts rarely seen, and the dairy industry is practically unknown. The gold and silver pheasant, the argus pheasant, and other gallinaceous birds hold a prominent place in the ornithology of China. Water-fowl inhabit the lakes, rivers, and marshes. The larger reptiles are unknown; but tortoises and turtles abound on the coast and lizards are plentiful in the south. The fish-fauna of China is one of the richest in the world. Sharks, rays, sturgeons, and other cartilaginous fishes are common on the coast and the carp formerly was very plentiful in the lakes and rivers. Locusts often commit extensive ravages. Silk-worms are highly valued and reared in vast numbers.

Mineral Resources.—The mineral wealth of China is very great, but until recently mining was conducted under very primitive methods and yielded consequently only a small product. The difficulty of access to many of the most productive mineral regions still continues as a bar to profitable mining development. Coal, iron, copper, lead, tin, mercury, and some gold (Yun-nan placers), besides salt (which is obtained from many brine springs) and China clay (and potter's earth)—the basis of the east-Asiatic industry of porcelain or china-ware manufactures—are the main mineral resources of the land. The productive coal-measures are very extensive and constitute the largest continuous coal-fields of the world. The chief development of the Carboniferous coal-beds, both bituminous and anthracitic, is found in the province of Shan-si, but the coal territory extends through several provinces from Chi-li to Sze-chuen. Much good coal of post-Carboniferous and Tertiary age (lignite) is also found. Kweichow is one of the richest of the mineral-bearing provinces. Of the non-metallic minerals special mention need be made of the highly prized jade or yu-stone, which has been found in Yun-nan, although most of the stone has been brought to the country by way of the NW. pass, the Yu-men or "Jade Gate."

Inhabitants.—Ethnologically, the Chinese belong to the Mongolian race. A tawny or parchment-colored skin, coarse and lank black hair, a thin beard, oblique eyes, high cheek-bones, and small hands and feet are characteristics of the race. The average height of the Chinaman is about equal to that of the European; the women are disproportionately small, and have a broad upper face, low nose, and linear eyes. Of the general character of the Chinese it is not easy to form a fair and impartial judgment. By some writers they are said to be wanting in true religious feeling and belief and to be governed in their actions by a grounded materialism. The people generally have no fear of death, commit suicide as the solution of a difficulty, and endure the most cruel tortures with a passive fortitude. They are as a race fond of peace and domestic order, industrious, practical, polite, appreciative of learning, and deeply imbued with the mercantile spirit. Chinese merchants are noted for their faithful observance of contracts. The language of the Chinese belongs to the monosyllabic class. In the mountainous districts of some southern provinces, principally Kwei-chow and Kwang-si, are the people called Miao-tse, who are thought to be descended from the aboriginal inhabitants of China. In the SW. part of the country (province of Sze-chuen) is another so-called aboriginal people, the Lolos. Other non-Chinese people inhabiting the country are the Manchus, who, although providing the reigning family, constitute but a small part of the population, the Tibetans in the west (Sze-chuen), and the Shans in the region adjoining Indo-China (Burma, Siam).

The worship of ancestors is a remarkable and prominent feature in Chinese social life and is dictated by that principle of filial piety which forms the basis of Chinese society. Marriage is universal and within the reach of all; but there is a strict separation of the sexes in social life. Women hold a very inferior position and are little better than slaves. Polygamy is not recognized by law, but secondary wives are common. Infanticide, though regarded as a crime, is practised to some extent. The Le-King, or Book of Rites, regulates Chinese manners and is one cause of their unchangeableness; for here they are stereotyped and handed down from age to age. Of the numerous Chinese festivals perhaps the most remarkable is that celebrated at the commencement of the new year, the first day of the year being the initial period or moment from which ages are dated. The festival of the dragon-boats is held on the fifth day of the fifth month; and at the first full moon of the year the feast of lanterns. The Tartar tonsure and braided queue became general with the Manchu conquest of the country. All the Chinese girls of the better classes suffer forcible compression of the feet in early infancy.

Manufactures.—The principal manufactures of the Chinese are silks, cottons, linens, paper, and pottery. The finest porcelain is made in the province of Kiang-si. Their rich silks and satins, light gauzes, beautiful embroidery, elaborate carving on wood, shell, ivory, and stone, delicate filigree-work in gold and silver, fine lacquered-ware and cabinet-work, antique vessels in bronze, and their brilliant coloring on pith paper, command universal admiration. Machinery still remains an almost unknown aid to the Chinese in their manufactures. The discovery of the magnetic needle is generally attributed to the Chinese, who, however, made no application of their knowledge to the purposes of navigation. Similarly, their early familiarity with the construction and properties of gunpowder was not associated with the manufacture of fire-arms, but with that of fireworks, which still constitutes an important industry of the land. The Chinese practised the art of printing centuries before it was originated in Europe, and they had paper long before the Europeans. During recent years, as a result of closer contact with the civilized world and feeling the necessity of superior aid in possible struggles with other nations, China has shown a marked awakening. Ship-building and the construction of munitions of war are now carried on at several points (Fu-chow, Shanghai, Nanking, Tien-tsin, etc.) and large iron-works have been established in the interior in association with ore-mining.

Government.—In the government of China the emperor is absolute in the empire, the governor in the province, the magistrate in the district. The emperor claims no hereditary divine right, and is not always the eldest son of the preceding monarch; the ablest son or other near relative may be nominated, but his right to the throne as the Tien-Tse, "son of heaven," can only be established by good government, in accordance with the principles laid down in the national sacred books. The emperor is absolute as legislator and administrator; but he must legislate in accordance with the general principles acknowledged in the country. He also constitutes in his own person the highest criminal court. The Chinese possess a carefully digested code of laws, which is added to and modified from time to time by imperial edicts. Their penal code dates back about 2000 years. Death, which the Chinaman prefers to long confinement, is the penalty for a large number of offences. The emperor is assisted in governing by a cabinet (Nai-ko) of ministers of state, consisting of four members, two of Manchu and two of Chinese origin, besides two associates from the Great College, whose province it is to guard the laws within the limits prescribed by the sacred books of Confucius and the code of the empire. There are seven administrative departments in the government, subordinated to the main council or cabinet, those of civil appointments, revenues, rites and ceremonies, military affairs, public works, criminal jurisdiction, and naval affairs (admiralty). Above the central administration is the Court of General Inspection, or the Censorate, consisting of from 40 to 50 members, and presided over by two chiefs, one of Manchu and the other of Chinese origin. The mandarins composing this see that all officers of the government, provincial or metropolitan, are faithful in the discharge of their respective duties. The Foreign Office, instituted in 1861 under the title of Tsungli-Yamen, was superseded in 1901 by a new Foreign Office called Wai-wu-pu. In each of the provinces is a governor who, besides being at the head of the civil jurisdiction, is commander-in-chief and possesses the power of life and death for certain offences. The governmental organization of each province is complete in itself, the division being virtually autonomous. In the case of most of the provinces, groups of two or three of them are placed under a viceroy or governor-general. The official corporate unit is the hsien or city district. A group of these city districts is, under a city of the first-class (departmental or prefectural city), designated as fu. The normal government of China is less a despotism than a morally supported autocracy, and it is in principle paternal. In ordinary times the Chinaman enjoys much practical freedom and can travel through the country or follow any calling he likes. The Chinese executive system is based on competitive examinations, which are intended to sift out from the millions of educated Chinese the best and ablest for the public service.

Education is eagerly sought by all classes. Literary proficiency commands everywhere respect and consideration, and primary instruction penetrates to the remotest villages. Self-supporting day-schools are universal throughout the country, and the office of teacher is followed by a great number of the literati. Government provides state examiners, but until recent years has done little to assist in the education of the people. In the Tung-Wen-Kwan, or College of Foreign Knowledge, at Peking, the more prominent foreign languages are taught, and there are also chairs of science and mathematics, many of which are held by foreign professors.

Army and Navy.—In theory the army consists of about 900,000 men, scattered throughout the empire, besides 250,000 Mongol and mercenary troops assumed to be placed at the disposal of the government. The total number of men available for war service is about 300,000, of which the Tien-tsin army contingent, numbering 100,000, is almost alone conspicuous through its modernised methods. The whole force is composed of the Ying-Ping, or National Army (with 18 army corps, one for each province), and the Eight Banners, the members of which are descendants of the Manchu conquerors. On the coast there are forts built on the most approved plans and mounted with rifled guns of steel. A large part of the army still remains a mere constabulary force. The imperial fighting navy is insignificant, and consists of a few armored and minor cruisers and a limited number of torpedo-boats and destroyers.

Religion.—Three forms of belief—the Confucian, the Buddhist, and the Taoist—may be considered the national religions, as they are believed in, more or less, by the great mass of the people. Of these, the Confucian and the Taoist are indigenous, but Buddhism was introduced from India. A struggle for ascendancy was long maintained between these religions, but has now entirely ceased; indeed, it is no unusual thing for all three to be professed by the same person, and, as they supplement one another, this is not altogether inconsistent. Confucianism, the contemplation and observance of the teachings of Confucius, who lived about 500 B.C., is the basis of the social life and political system of the Chinese. It has been professed by all their greatest men, and is still the sole belief of the educated classes. It is, however, less a religion than a philosophy,— an ethical and political creed,—and does not pretend to treat of spiritual things. To live in conformity with the moral teachings of the great sage in family and social relations and in what pertains to the duties of citizenship is the professed aim of the Confucianist. Funeral temples are erected to Confucius, and, though his image is not used as an idol, his tablet is worshipped, and sacrifices of oxen and sheep are offered before it at the equinoxes. Buddhism was introduced into China soon after the beginning of the Christian era, several centuries after its birth in India. Though extending over the whole country and influencing more or less the mass of the people, it is fast losing its hold on them, and has very little of the power and authority it once possessed. Its edifices are going to decay, and no new ones rise upon their ruins. Its priests are illiterate and, together with their religion, are held in contempt by the philosophic Chinaman. Taoism has not more hold than Buddhism on the literate Chinese. Its priests are generally ignorant men, few of them understanding the real principles of their faith, which has little connection with the teachings of its reputed founder, Lao-tse, a contemporary of Confucius. They practise a mystic alchemy, prepare spells and incantations, and, like modern spiritualists, hold intercourse with the dead. These mystics worship certain stars, which are supposed to influence human life, and also genii, devils, and inferior spirits.

Besides these three religions, which alone affect the bulk of the people, there is a ritual state worship,—a kind of philosophic pantheism, an adoration of certain natural objects; but it is a mere ceremonial and associated with no theological doctrines. At the winter solstice the emperor offers sacrifices at the altar of "Heaven" in Peking. Chinese philosophy is atheistical, and deduces "the development of the universe from one unintelligent and will-less principle." Hence all educated Chinese are theoretically atheists. Veneration for the dead with the Chinese finds expression in ancestral worship.

While Confucianism is to be regarded as the state church, there is no hierarchical establishment maintained by the Chinese government. The government is tolerant of religious diversity, except where a political design is suspected. Missions are maintained in China by Christians of many sects, and with considerable success in some places; but the popular prejudice against Christianity is strong. The Catholic church counts upward of 1,000,000 adherents in China, and there are in the country perhaps 100,000 Evangelical Christians. The Mohammedans number probably fully 20,000,000, who are mainly distributed over the NE. and SW. provinces. There are a few Chinese Jews.

Commerce.—The foreign trade of China has assumed great importance. Raw and manufactured silk and tea are the great staple products for export. Raw cotton, beans and beansake, skins, and hides are also sent abroad in large quantities. Wooden wares, fans, paper, fire-crackers, musk, rhubarb, sugar, cassia, grass-cloth, and ornamental goods are likewise exported. The foreign imports are mainly cotton goods, kerosene oil, metals, metal wares, etc. The commercial intercourse of China is mainly with Great Britain and her colonies. Among other countries the United States, Germany, Japan, and Russia take successive rank. There are about 40 ports open to foreign commerce—the so-called Treaty Ports—some of which are river-ports situated in the interior of the country. The following are the principal ones (excluding Manchuria): Shanghai, Canton, Kow-lung (near Hong Kong), Tien-tsin, Swatow, Amoy, Chi-fu, Lappa, Fu-chow, Hankow, Meng-tse, Kiung-chow, Nanking, Hang-chow, Wu-chow, Ching-kiang, Ning-po, Kiao-chau, Chung-king, Pakhoi, Wen-chow, San-shui, Su-chow. The bulk of the trade with the British Empire passes through Hong Kong (near the entrance to the Canton River), which has been a British possession since 1842. China herself has a very large internal and coastwise trade, which is partly carried on by river and coasting steam-vessels, many of them owned by Chinese and built in China. In those sections of the interior where there are no waterways the transport service is conducted by the backs of men and animals, and the ordinary travelling conveyance is the palanquin. The Grand or Imperial Canal, connecting Hang-chow with Tien-tsin, over a length of some 700 miles, was constructed in the early part of the seventh century, and served for a long time as an important artery of communication, but its usefulness has been somewhat impaired as a result of the irregularities of the Hoang-ho. There are several thousand miles of railway in operation, nearly all opened within the last five years, and the work of construction is proceeding rapidly. The building is done by foreign companies. The aggregate length of the telegraph lines is about 15,000 miles.

Great Wall.—Of the numerous constructions—temples, pagodas, bridges, canals, etc.—for which China is famous none is so remarkable as the Great Wall, which extends along the northern frontier of the country and measures approximately 1300 miles in length. It is properly the most gigantic fortification of the world, and appears in places in double and triple courses. Its general height is about 20 feet, with a width at the base of 25 feet, narrowing to the top. Great square towers mark intervals of its course. It is generally assumed that the fortification, as it now stands, does not represent the original structure, and may not date further back than the closing period of the Middle Ages. Earth enclosed in brickwork forms the mass of the wall, but for half of its length it is hardly more than a heap of gravel and rubbish. It has been gradually falling into decay.

Cities.—The number of large cities in China is very great, but the population given for most of them is hardly more than approximate or represents only a rough estimation. Among the largest are Peking, Hankow, Canton, Si-ngan, Chang-chow, Tien-tsin, Hang-chow, Fu-chow, Shanghai, Siang-tan, Su-chow, Chung-king, Nanking, Ning-po, Ching-kiang, and Amoy. Peking, the capital, has a population variously estimated at from 500,000 to 1,600,000 or more.

European Possessions in China.—England holds Hong Kong, Wei-hai-wei, the latter on the coast of the Shan-tung peninsula; Portugal, Macao, on the coast of Kwang-tung; Germany, Kiao-chau, on the coast of Shan-tung; France, a district about the bay of Kwang-chow, on the coast of the peninsula of Lai-chow, Kwang-tung. Manchuria is in great part occupied by Russia.

History.—The historical period of Chinese history may be said to begin with the latter part of the third millennium B.C., although a great infusion of the fabulous still enters into the annals of the succeeding centuries. The Chinese records speak of three sovereigns, Yao, Shun, and Yü, who at this time are said to have founded social and political order and to have introduced an advanced husbandry among the people. In the period from about 2200 to 250 B.C. three dynasties successively held sway,—the Hsia, Shang, and Chow dynasties. Under the first two the Chinese dominions were confined to what is now northern China, but under the Chow dynasty they were extended over the Yang-tse basin. This period of two millenniums is known as that of the feudal state, China at this time having been parcelled out among numerous petty chiefs. About 500 B.C. flourished the great philosopher and moralist Kung-fu-tee (Confucius), whose teachings so powerfully affected the intellectual and political life of the Chinese people. About two centuries later Hsueh Meng-tse (Mencius), whose ethical and economic diata left an equal impress upon the nation. About 250 B.C. a ruler of the dynasty of Tsin brought the various parts of the country under his absolute sway, and inaugurated the imperial state. This first emperor undertook the construction of the Great Wall as a protection against the Tartars. Under the dynasty of Han, which succeeded that of Tsin about 200 B.C. and ruled for about four and a half centuries, the Chinese Empire reached its greatest extension, and was as flourishing within as it was powerful without. Soon after the beginning of the Christian era Buddhism began to make progress in China. In the Middle Ages there were endless divisions and reunions of the empire, varied by incursions and partial subjugations by the Tartars and Manchus. In the tenth century the Tartar Khitan (Ki-tah) established their sway in the N., but about the beginning of the twelfth century they succumbed to the Kin, a Manchu people. In 1215 the Mongol hordes of Genghis Khan captured Yenking (Peking), and in 1280 Kublai Khan, the grandson of Genghis Khan, completed the conquest of China. The Mongols ruled over the country till 1368, when they were expelled by the Chinese and the Ming native dynasty succeeded. The Manchus established themselves in Peking in 1644, and finally, after a seven-years' struggle, acquired the sovereignty of the whole empire. Many of the conquering race now filled the highest offices of state. More than one powerful emperor of the race has ably conducted the government, and the Manchu dynasty still remains in power.

In early times the Chinese do not appear to have been opposed to intercourse with foreigners; but the conduct of the Spanish and Portuguese between 1520 and 1570 excited their hostility. The Manchu government restricted foreign trade and intercourse to Canton, where they were carried on through the medium of the hong merchants. In 1840 a war broke out between China and England, which is known as the Opium War, the exciting cause having been the effort on the part of the English to compel the Chinese to allow the importation of opium, the production of which article was a source of great wealth to India. The British brought this war to a successful close in 1842, and by the treaty of Nanking the ports of Canton, Amoy, Fu-chow, Ning-po, and Shanghai were thrown open to British commerce and Hong Kong was ceded to England. With 5 free ports (since increased to about 40) foreign trade with China soon assumed great proportions. The empire was forced to emerge from its state of isolation with regard to the rest of the world. In 1844 treaties were concluded with the United States and France. In 1856 a second war broke out with England. The English were joined by the French; and in 1857 the allies bombarded and occupied Canton, and in the following year captured the ports at the mouth of the Pei-ho, which brought the enemy to terms. China concluded treaties at Tien-tsin with Great Britain, France, Russia (to which power she ceded the Amur Territory), and the United States. Fresh difficulties between the Chinese government and Great Britain and France led to an Anglo-French invasion in 1860 and the occupation of Peking by the allies. One of the most remarkable events in recent Chinese history is the Tai-ping (Tao-ping) Rebellion, 1850-64. The leader of a society of God-worshippers persuaded himself and his followers that he had received a divine commission to uproot idolatry, extirpate the Tartar intruders, and establish the new native dynasty of Tai-ping, or Universal Peace. This rebellion, which was at first successful, was finally suppressed in 1864 by the imperial forces, assisted by contingents of English and French troops. The invasion of Tongking by the French involved them in a war with China, 1884-85. In 1894 China became engaged in a disastrous war with Japan, growing out of their relations to Korea. By the peace of Shimonoseki, in 1895, China recognised the independence of Korea and ceded the island of Formosa and the peninsula of Liao-tung to Japan. The threats of the European powers, however, compelled Japan to forego Liao-tung. This war was followed by various depredations by the European powers upon Chinese territory. Germany obtained possession of Kiao-chau (Kiao-chow); Russia, of Port Arthur; England, of Wei-hai-wei; while France was given a foothold on the peninsula of Lai-chow. The year 1900 witnessed the culmination of the Boxer movement, aiming at the restoration of former conditions and war upon the foreigners. The siege of the foreign legations in Peking brought on an invasion by the forces of the European powers, Japan, and the United States, and the occupation of Peking by the foreigners. China was forced to a humiliating peace. Russia took advantage of these troubles to occupy Manchuria. In 1902 England and Japan entered into a treaty for the preservation of the integrity of China. In 1904 Manchuria became the principal theatre of a bloody war between Russia and Japan.

Chinese Turkestan. See TURKESTAN.

Chinese Wall, a name given to the southern edge of the ice-plateau of Grinnell Land.

Chingford, a town of Essex, England, near the Epping Forest and 4 miles from Waltham Abbey. Pop. in 1901, 4375.

Ching-hai, ching'hi', a seaport of China, province of Che-kiang, situated at the mouth of the Yung-kiang and forming the outer port of Ning-po, from which it is about 10 miles distant.

Ching-kiang, ching'ke-ang', or Chin-kiang, a city of China, province of Kiang-su, on the right bank of the Yang-tse-kiang, at the junction of the Grand Canal, 45 miles E. by N. of Nanking. It is a treaty-port, the imports exceeding those of any other Chinese port except Shanghai. Extensive suburbs stretch along the canal, and the activity exhibited on the waters affords evidence of the commercial importance of the city. The place was once fortified, but has been dismantled. In 1853 it was destroyed by the Tai-pings. Pop. estimated at about 140,000.

Chingleput, ching'gle-püt', or Chengalpatt, a town of British India, capital of a district, 36 miles S.W. of Madras, on the river Palur. Pop. about 6000.

Chingleput, a district of British India, Madras presidency, on the Coromandel coast. Capital, Chingleput.

Ching-te, a city of China. See JAXON.

Ching-ting, ching'ting', a city of China, province of Chi-li, 155 miles S.W. of Peking.

Ching-tu, a city of China. See CHENG-TU.

Chinot, a town of British India, in the Punjab, near the Ravi, 80 miles W. by N. of Lahore. Pop. about 15,000.

Chin-kiang-fu, China. See CHING-KIANG.

Chinnampo, or Chinnampo, a free port (since Oct., 1897) of Korea, on the W. coast, 105 miles N.W. of Seoul. It has an active trade. Pop. in 1899, 16,730.

Chin-ngan, chin'n'gan', a city of China, in the W. part of the province of Kwang-si, on an affluent of the Yü-kiang, a few miles to the S. of the Tropic of Cancer.

Chimo, chee'no, a post-village of San Bernardino co., Cal., in the valley of the Santa Anna River, and on the Southern Pacific R., about 35 miles E. by S. of Los Angeles. It is the seat of an extensive beet-sugar industry.

Chinon, shee'nôw', a town of France, capital of an arrondissement in the department of Indre-et-Loire, on the Vienne, 25 miles SW. of Tours. It has the ruins of an imposing mediæval castle frequently used as a royal residence, in which Joan of Arc first presented herself to Charles VII. Chinon is the birthplace of Rabelais, to whom a monument has been erected. The town was important at the beginning of the Middle Ages under the name of Caino. Pop. in 1901, 5868.

Chinoock, che'nook', a post-village of Choteau co., Mont., on the Great Northern R., 97 miles NE. of Fort Benton. Pop. about 300.

Chinoock, a post-village of Pacific co., Wash., near the mouth of the Columbia River and about 8 miles from Ilwaco station. The chief industry of the place is salmon-fishing.

Chinquapin, chink'a-pin, a post-village of Duplin co., N.C., on the Northeast River, about 40 miles N. of Wilmington. Pop. about 300.

Chinsura, chin-soo'rá, a former town of Bengal, on the Hughli, now a part of the city of HUGLY. It was the principal Dutch settlement in Bengal, and was ceded to the British in 1824.

Chinú, a town of Colombia, in the department of Bolívar, 95 miles SE. of Cartagena. Pop. 8000.

Chin-wang-tao, a treaty port of China, in the province of Chi-li, on the Gulf of Liao-tung, about 150 miles E. of Peking.

Chiny, shee'nee', a small town of Belgium, province of Luxembourg, on the Semoir, 8 miles SSW. of Neufchâteau. It has important lumbering industries. Pop. in 1900, 902.

Chioggia, ke-od'já (anc. Fo'ea Clo'dia), a seaport town of Italy, 15 miles S. of Venice, on an island in the southern extremity of the Venetian Lagoon. It is founded on piles, well built, and connected with the mainland by a massive stone bridge. It has a fine main street lined with arcades. The most prominent edifices are the cathedral and the mediæval corn-hall. The harbor is protected by forts and batteries. It has yards for ship-building, important fisheries, and a trade with the interior by the Brenta, Adige, Po, and several canals. It is a bishop's see. Pop. in 1901, including the suburb of Sottomarina, 26,520.

Chios, ki'ós (Gr. Χίος), Khio, kee'ó, Skio, or Scio, she'ó (an Italian form of the name, adopted in English), called by the Turks Sakiz-Adassí, an island in the Ægean Sea, belonging to Turkey, off the W. coast of Asia Minor, from which it is 4 miles distant and about 35 miles S. of Lesbos. Length, from N. to S., 32 miles; greatest breadth, 18 miles. Area, about 320 sq. m. The surface is very much diversified, the mountains rising to a height of about 4000 feet. It is one of the richest and most beautiful islands of the Levant. The principal products are wine of superior quality, mastic, silk, figs, lemons, oranges, and other fruits. Antimony is obtained in large quantities. Goat-skins are an important article of export. The island is subject to terrible earthquakes. Previous to 1822 this island was the most prosperous in the Grecian Archipelago, but in that year, some of its inhabitants having risen in revolt, nearly all the population, comprising over 100,000 persons, were massacred or sold into slavery and the buildings and plantations were for the most part destroyed. Capital, Chios or Castro. Pop. about 60,000. Chios was one of the most flourishing of the Ionian colonies on the Asiatic coast.

Chios, or Castro, a town, the capital of the island of Chios, near the middle of the E. coast. Pop. about 14,000.

Chipley, a banking post-town of Washington co., Fla., 15 miles by rail E. of Caryville. Pop. in 1900, 652.

Chipley, a banking post-town of Harris co., Ga., 8 miles by rail N. of Hamilton. Pop. in 1900, 459.

Chipman, a post-village of Queen's co., New Brunswick, on the Central R. of New Brunswick. The banking point is St. John. Pop. about 200.

Chipmonk, a post-village of Cattaraugus co., N.Y. Pop. about 250.

Chipo'la, a post-station of Calhoun co., Fla., on the Chipola River.

Chipola River rises in Henry co., Ala., runs southward into Florida, and enters the Apalachicola River after a course of about 130 miles. The lower part is navigable.

Chippawa, Ontario, Canada. See CHIPPWA.

Chippenham, chip'nüm, a municipal borough of England, in Wiltshire, on the Avon, 22 miles E. of Bristol. It has a spacious church, partly built in the twelfth century. Pop. in 1901, 5074.

Chippenhook, a post-village of Rutland co., Vt. The banking point is Rutland. Pop. 150.

Chippewa, originally Ojibway, or Ojibbewa, a river of Wisconsin, rises by several branches in the N. part of the state, runs generally southwestward, and enters the Mississippi River at the SE. end of Lake Pepin, about 4 miles above Wabasha. Its length is estimated at 250 miles. Its largest affluent is the Red Cedar.

Chippewa, a county of Michigan, in the eastern part of the Upper Peninsula. Area, 1580 sq. m. It is bounded on the N. by Lake Superior and Tequamenon Bay, on the E. by St. Mary River, and on the SE. by Lake Huron. Capital, Sault Ste. Marie. Pop. in 1890, 12,019; in 1900, 21,338.

Chippewa, a county in the southwest-central part of Minnesota, has an area of 583 sq. m. It is bounded on the SW. by the Minnesota River and is intersected by the Chippewa River. Capital, Montevideo. Pop. in 1890, 8555; in 1900, 12,499.

Cincinnati, sin-sin-ná'tee, the metropolis of the state of Ohio and the county seat of Hamilton co., is on the right or N. bank of the Ohio River, opposite the mouth of the Licking, 476 miles by water below Pittsburg, Pa., and 1520 miles above New Orleans, La. It is the terminus or intersection of several great trunk lines of railway, and is 305 miles SE. of Chicago, Ill., and 553 miles due W. of Washington. Lat. of the Cincinnati Observatory, at Mount Lookout, 38° 8' 19" N.; lon. 84° 25' 21" W.

Cincinnati, the tenth city in population of the United States, is situated in a valley about 3 miles in diameter, environed on the N. side by a semicircular range of hills rising 400-500 feet above the river, while around the southern margin the Ohio River sweeps in a grand curve. The greater part of the city is built on two terraces or plains, the first 60 and the second 112 feet above low-water mark, and occupies a position 430-550 feet above sea-level. It is connected by several bridges with Covington, Newport, and Ludlow, on the Kentucky side of the Ohio, the most noted of which is the suspension bridge erected in 1865 and reconstructed in 1897. It measures, inclusive of the approaches, 2720 feet in length, and carries the roadway 103 feet above low-water line. Three of the bridges are railroad bridges. The central and business portions of the city are compactly built and the streets are laid out with much regularity. The lower quarters, which are largely occupied by warehouses and manufacturing establishments, are frequently flooded at stages of high water. There is, below the Newport bridge, a fine public landing or levee about 1000 feet long, which, with its floating wharves and wharf-boats and the busy commercial life, presents an animated and inspiring picture.

The city is well provided with street- (mainly electric) railways, which render the suburban villages readily accessible and afford pleasurable trips for citizens and visitors. Several "inclined planes" ascend to the surrounding heights and make a rapid approach to Clifton Heights, Mount Auburn, Mount Adams, Fairview, etc., where are located the best residential quarters, and which present a charming alternation of hilly undulating tracts. Beyond the Miami Canal, which connects the city with Lake Erie, is the district known as "Over the Rhine," which is mainly occupied by the extensive German contingent of the population.

Of the buildings of a more or less public character a few of the more notable are the Chamber of Commerce, a striking edifice, monumental in effect; the United States government building, 364 feet long and erected at a cost of nearly $5,000,000; the city-hall, 332 by 203 feet, a structure of brown granite and red sandstone and costing about $1,600,000; the Springer Music Hall, Art Museum, St. Peter's cathedral, armory, Odd Fellows' temple, public library (with 275,000 volumes), court-house, opera-houses, etc. A feature of special attraction is the Tyler-Davidson Fountain, on Fountain Square, considered to be one of the finest pieces of monumental art executed in the United States. Among other features of special interest are the zoological gardens and the Bookwood Pottery, on Mount Adams, famous for its faience-wares.

Cincinnati maintains many hospital and sanitarian institutions, a commodious insane asylum (Longview Asylum), workhouse, etc., within and about the city; also numerous medical, dental, law, and commercial colleges of high grade, among the medical schools being the Ohio Medical College and the Miami Medical College. The University of Cincinnati (constructed from institutions whose foundation extends back to 1819 and reorganized in 1870), with which the Cincinnati Hospital is affiliated, has academic, medical, law, clinical and pathological, and dental departments, and was attended in 1900 by 1550 students. It has associated with it the Cincinnati Observatory. Other educational institutions are the Mount St. Vincent's Academy, St. Xavier's College, Lane Theological Seminary, Hebrew Union College, Art Academy of the Cincinnati Museum Association, College of Music, and the Ohio Mechanics' Institute. The city is liberally provided with public parks, one of which, the Burnet Woods, occupies about 170 acres, while the famous Eden Park, often styled the "Garden of Eden," has an area of 216 acres. Spring Grove Cemetery is noted as one of the most beautiful and picturesque cemeteries in the country.

Cincinnati ranks high as a manufacturing city, the annual value of the output of its factories being about $150,000,000-$200,000,000 and representing the labor of approximately 8000 factories. The more important products include clothing, iron-wares, machinery, engines, safes, wagons, boots and shoes, malted and distilled liquors, soaps, paints, pottery, furniture, etc. The city is largely engaged in the manufacture of hog- and beef-products, and is one of the chief centres of the pork trade of the country. It is also an important horse-market and a leading exchange for grain and pig-iron. The city is most favorably situated as a central distributing point between the eastern seaboard and the West, and is the great gateway from the North to the South. Its river commerce is important in both passenger and freight traffic.

Cincinnati (named in honor of the Society of the Cincinnati) was first settled in 1788, but not until 1816 was there any manifestation of important growth. In that year steam navigation on the Ohio River was inaugurated, and the place thenceforward grew rapidly. It was incorporated as a town in 1802 and as a city in 1819. The population in 1820 was 9642; in 1830, 24,831; in 1840, 46,338; in 1850, 115,435; in 1860, 161,044; in 1870, 216,239; in 1880, 255,139; in 1890, 296,908; in 1900, 325,902. Cleveland, a port of entry, the largest city of Ohio, and the county-seat of Cuyahoga co., is delightfully situated on the south shore of Lake Erie, at the mouth of the Cuyahoga River, which flows through the city, affording a fine sheltered harbor, to which has been added a commodious ship-channel and an outer harbor of refuge, which is protected by a huge breakwater 2 miles in length and half a mile out from shore. Cleveland is connected by the Ohio Canal with the Ohio River at Portsmouth, and, in addition to its superior water-avenues, it is the centre of an important system of railroads (the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis, the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern, the Erie, etc.) branching out in all directions. It is 150 miles by rail NW. of Pittsburgh, Pa., and 183 miles SW. of Buffalo, N.Y. Lake steamers connect the city with Buffalo and Duluth and with all important lake ports. Lat.  $41^{\circ} 20' 5''$  N.; lon.  $81^{\circ} 42' 8''$  W. Two viaducts of stone and iron—one 3211 feet in length, completed in 1878 at a cost of \$2,200,000, and having a draw 332 feet long; and the other 3931 feet long, completed in 1888 at a cost of about \$1,000,000—extend across the gulf of Cuyahoga and are among the finest works of the kind in the country. The city, lying at an elevation of nearly 600 feet above the sea, is built in greater part upon a plain that rises 60-150 feet above the lake, and is divided by the Cuyahoga inlet into a smaller western section (West Cleveland) and the major (eastern) city. The broad and regular avenues, streets, and boulevards, with their massive business houses and villa-residences, surrounded by open lawns and gardens, and handsomely ornamented with shade-trees and shrubbery, give to it an imposing and most attractive aspect. It has not inaptly been termed the "Forest City." The chief avenues of business are Superior Street and the western section of Euclid Avenue. The former expands into the public square or Monumental Park, containing a soldiers' monument and statue of General Moses Cleveland, the founder of the city. On the square is located the building of the post-office and custom-house, and near by is the massive city-hall. Euclid Avenue, the most fashionable residence-street of the city, is justly famous for its gardens and mansions, and ranks as one of the finest residence-streets in the country. The city has a number of fine parks (Wade, Gordon, Rockefeller) and the beautiful Lake View Cemetery, containing the Garfield Memorial (erected in 1890). Among the city's institutions of learning are the Western Reserve University (Adelbert College, Cleveland Medical College, College for Women, etc.), the Case School of Applied Sciences, St. Ignatius College, University School, Notre Dame Academy, etc. The city has a music hall, seating about 5000 people, and a public library containing 200,000 volumes. It enjoys a temperate climate, with a mean annual temperature of  $50^{\circ}$  and a rainfall of 37.6 inches.

The manufacturing and commercial interests of Cleveland are most extensive and varied, the former being mainly associated with the iron-industry, the city being one of the foremost receiving points for the ore of that metal. The product in 1900 from the iron- and steel-works (about 150 in number) was valued at $24,275,000; from the foundries and machine-shops, at $15,500,000. The city is also very closely associated with the oil- (petroleum) industry of the United States, and is one of its chief lumber marts; it is in addition one of the chief ship-building cities of the Union, the ship-yards constructing vessels (mainly steamers) of 1500-2500 tons burden. Among the manufactures may be enumerated those of sewing-machines, clothing, agricultural implements, boilers, engines, electric machines and appliances, etc. Slaughtering and meat-packing are also among the major industries of the city. The total value of the manufactured product of Cleveland was in 1900, $139,850,000. The city has a very extensive lake commerce.

Cleveland was named in honor of General Moses Cleveland, by whom it was laid out in 1796, and was incorporated as a village in 1814, and as a city in 1836. Its growth has been rapid, and during the decade 1890 to 1899 its percentage of increase was not equalled in any city east of Chicago. Its population in 1810 was but 57; in 1820, 150; in 1830, 1035; in 1840, 6671; in 1850, 17,034; in 1860, 43,417; in 1870, 92,820; in 1880, 160,146; in 1890, 261,353; in 1900, 381,768.

Among its many tributaries are the Douglas Water and the Avon, which join it in the middle part of its course. Its scenery is extremely picturesque. Near Lanark is a succession of rapids and beautiful cataracts, the famous Falls of the Clyde. The Firth of Clyde expands into a noble bay, about 50 miles long and in its widest part over 30 miles across, in which are the islands of Arran, Bute, Great Cumbrae, and Little Cumbrae. From the Firth of Clyde the inlets Loch Long and Loch Fyne proceed northward. The length of the Clyde from its source to Dumbarton is about 100 miles. The work of making the river navigable for large vessels between Dumbarton and Glasgow belongs to the great achievements of hydraulic engineering. The Clyde is the greatest seat of ship-building in the world. Near the head of the estuary is the seaport of Greenock; on the island of Bute, the watering-place of Rothesay; and on the eastern shore of the firth, the town of Ayr. The tide ascends as far as Glasgow. A canal connects the Clyde at Glasgow with the Forth. The basin of the Clyde, or Clydesdale, is famed for its orchard, coal- and iron-mines, and its horses.
